

UCLA

UCLA Historical Journal

Title

[Contributors]

Permalink

<https://escholarship.org/uc/item/0qn7n672>

Journal

UCLA Historical Journal, 14(0)

Author

Historical Journal, [No author]

Publication Date

1994

Copyright Information

Copyright 1994 by the author(s). All rights reserved unless otherwise indicated. Contact the author(s) for any necessary permissions. Learn more at <https://escholarship.org/terms>

Contributors

KATE CANNON is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of California, Los Angeles. Her dissertation traces the evolution of social feminism and public policy during World War II and the reconversion period. She is also a lecturer in the history and women's studies departments at University of Miami, Coral Gables.

CAROL F. CINI is a Ph.D. student in the Department of History at the University of California, Los Angeles, currently focusing on women in the twentieth-century United States. She received a B.A. in English from Stanford University and an M.A. in History from San Francisco State University, with an emphasis on the U.S. and the comparative history of women.

ALISON J. CLARKE received a B.A. from Manchester Metropolitan University and an M.A. from the Royal College of Art (U.K.). She is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Anthropology, University College, London, England. Her doctoral research is an extension of her previous historical analysis of commodities and forms of exchange. Her M.A. thesis was on "Tupperware: Product as Social Relation." Her dissertation involves a contemporary ethnography of material culture, consumption and identity in which she regards the 'household' as a site of everyday political contestation.

CHRISTINE A. COLIN received her B.A. in Music and History with certification for Secondary Education from Carthage College (Kenosha, WI), an M.A. in European History from Murray State University in Kentucky, and is currently ABD finishing her Ph.D. in modern European intellectual history, with minor fields in twentieth-century China and Music History, at Pennsylvania State University. Her chief focus lies in Modern German History, particularly the Nazi era, but she is also quite actively engaged in research in the field of music, and is interested in the role of women in music. She is presently working on her dissertation, entitled "Hitler and Wagner: An Ideological Reassessment." She also currently holds a position as Lecturer of Western Civilization at Penn State and is a History Instructor for the Department of Independent Learning.

SUSAN ENGLANDER received a B.A. in Zoology\German from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1974, a B.S. in Nursing from Cornell University in 1977, and an M.A. in U.S. History from San Francisco State University in 1989. Mellen Press published her masters' thesis, The San Francisco Wage Earners' Suffrage League: Class Conflict and Class Coalition in the California Woman Suffrage Movement, 1907-1912 in 1992. She is currently in the Ph.D. program of the History Department at UCLA, and is researching the life work of Lillian Gilbreth, scientific management expert of the workplace and home, for her dissertation.

SANGEETA R. GUPTA is specializing in Asian Indian and Indo-American history at the University of California, Los Angeles. Her research interests include cross-cultural issues, acquisition of female gender role identities and immigrant family dynamics. She is the co-editor of a book on South Asian women to be published in December, 1995.

LISA HOPKINS studied English at King's College, Cambridge, and then moved to the University of Warwick to do an M.A. on Drama of the English and European Renaissance and a Ph.D. on the dramatist John Ford. She is now lecturer in English at Sheffield Hallam University (U.K.). Her previous publications include Elizabeth I and Her Court, Women Who Would Be Kings: Female Rulers of the Sixteenth Century and John Ford's Political Theatre. She is currently working on a book on marriage in Shakespeare.

JOAN MARIE JOHNSON is a Ph.D. student in United States history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She is beginning a dissertation examining the intersection of region with race, class, and gender in the work of white and Black clubwomen and members of the United Daughters of the Confederacy in early twentieth-century South Carolina.

JENNIFER KALISH is a doctoral student in American history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She is currently working on her dissertation, which is an intellectual history of postwar suburbanization entitled "Masculinity/Femininity and the Suburban Myth."

LISA G. MATERSON is a Ph.D. student in United States history at the University of California, Los Angeles, focusing on twentieth century American women's history. She received her M.A. in Middle East history from UCLA and her B.A. in Liberal Arts and Middle Eastern studies from the University of Texas at Austin.

REBECCA J. MEAD is a Ph.D. student in United States history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She received a B.S. from the University of New Mexico and an M.A. from San Francisco State University. Her recent research has focused on women's labor and political activism in California, race relations in the West, and U.S. social welfare policy history.

ALLISON L. SNEIDER is a doctoral student in United States history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She received her B.A. from Reed College in 1989 and her M.A. from UCLA in 1993. Her dissertation examines the American woman suffrage movement during the Gilded Age with particular attention to the politics of suffrage internationalism and the impact of United States expansion on women's demands for the vote.

ELIZABETH TOWNSEND is an advanced doctoral student in Modern European History at the University of California, Los Angeles. She is currently working on her dissertation, "When You Have Lost Your All in a World's Upheaval": The Great War, Vera Brittain, and Others: A Biography."

AMY THOMAS received her B.A. from the University of Southern California in political science and is currently a second-year Ph.D. student in the Chinese History program at the University of California, Los Angeles. Her dissertation topic will be 'the cultural politics of anti-footbinding in early twentieth century China'.

JO ANN WOODSUM is ABD in United States history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She received her B.A. from Dartmouth College and a J.D. from the University of Pennsylvania Law School. Her dissertation is entitled "Representing Zuni Women: The Politics of Race, Gender and Sexuality in Euro-American and Indigenous Discourses, 1870-1920." She is currently the Native American Studies Dissertation Fellow at Dartmouth College.