

UC Berkeley

Berkeley Undergraduate Journal of Classics

Title

Catullus 51: Translated from Latin to English

Permalink

<https://escholarship.org/uc/item/1pb8b0m4>

Journal

Berkeley Undergraduate Journal of Classics, 1(1)

Author

Levin, Lisa

Publication Date

2012

Copyright Information

Copyright 2012 by the author(s). All rights reserved unless otherwise indicated. Contact the author(s) for any necessary permissions. Learn more at <https://escholarship.org/terms>

Peer reviewed|Undergraduate

Catullus 51: An English Translation

Lisa Levin
University of California, Berkeley
Comparative Literature
Class of 2013

Ille mi par esse deo videtur, ille, si fas est, superare divos, qui sedens adversus identidem te spectat et audit

That man seems to me equal to a god. No, if I may be bold, he surpasses divinity, that man who is always seated before you to behold you and hear you dulce ridentem, misero quod omnes eripit sensus mihi: nam simul te, Lesbia, aspexi, nihil est super mi [vocis in ore;]

laughing sweetly—which robs me in my misery of all senses: for when I look at you, Lesbia, my voice dries before reaching my lips;

lingua sed torpet, tenuis sub artus flamma demanat, sonitu suo tintinant aures geminae, teguntur lumina nocte.

my tongue lies still. A delicate flame shivers down my limbs, my ears ring in the silence, and twin night drapes over my eyes.

otium, Catulle, tibi molestumst:
otio exsultas nimiumque gestis:
otium et reges prius et beatas perdidit urbes.

Leisure, Catullus, is troublesome to you:
you revel in and desire leisure excessively-- Idleness has, in times past, ruined both kings and glistening cities.