FOREWORD

Since its constitution over twenty years ago, the UCLA Women's Law Journal has steadfastly sought to provide a space for legal scholarship concerned with the gendered aspects of the law. We publish groundbreaking scholarship on a variety of topics with the goal of demonstrating that gender issues are implicated in every area of the law.

We continue our commitment to exploring diverse topics in this issue. Abolishing Anonymous Sperm Donation argues that the application of a rights based approach to the topic demonstrates that anonymous sperm donation is not ethically defensible. Our second article, Women and Girls' Experiences before, during, and after Incarceration, argues for the usage of the human rights paradigm as an innovative approach to protecting criminal justice involved women from gender based violence.

We would like to thank our editorial board for their hard work and dedication. In addition, we would like to thank those who are writing on topics of gender and the law, as well as those that are advocating for women's rights more broadly. Finally, we would like to thank our readers for their continued commitment to the study women's issues in the legal arena.
