EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Tobacco presentations in commercial motion pictures are of serious public health concern because cumulative exposure to this imagery causes large numbers of adolescents to start smoking.¹ An estimated 52% of adolescent smoking initiation is attributed to this exposure.^{2,3}

To examine trends in the number of tobacco presentations over time, by Motion Picture Association of America age-classification and North American distributor, we surveyed a large sample of films released to U.S. theaters 1991-2008 to trace the proportion of smoking and smokefree films, incidence of tobacco imagery in films with smoking, tobacco impressions (incidents times paid admissions) delivered to theater audiences, and tobacco brand display.

Policy advocacy aimed at reducing adolescent exposure to tobacco in youth-rated (G, PG and PG13) films by modernizing the rating system to rate smoking movies R, with some specific exceptions,⁴ has been directed at the major studio distributors and their parent corporations since 2001. Some companies have adopted public stances that reflect growing public concern over the issue of smoking in youth-rated films. We pay particular attention to smoking trends in youth-rated films over recent years.

KEY FINDINGS

Analysis of 1,769 films released over the past 18 years established that:

- Most youth exposure to on-screen smoking occurs in youth-rated films, particularly PG13. In 2008, PG13 films delivered 65% of tobacco impressions (11.7 billion of the 18.1 billion impressions) and G/PG films delivered another 1% (200 million).
- The fraction of all films that are smokefree has been growing since the late 1990s, yet still remains below 50% even for youth-rated (G/PG/PG13) films.
- Tobacco incidents per film have fallen by about half since 2005, led by youth-rated films. The total number of tobacco incidents on screen remains above levels seen in the late 1990s.
- The number of films with tobacco brands has, if anything, increased. Marlboro, the brand most frequently chosen by adolescent smokers, was displayed most often — accounting for 75% of brand display in 2008, for example.

BY MEDIA COMPANY

- Tobacco incidents have nearly disappeared from Disney's G and PG films.
- In recent years, around 75% of films released by GE (Universal) have featured tobacco — more than from any other major studio. In 2008, tobacco incidents per PG13 film (on the rise) were as high as incidents per R-rated film (on the decline).
- Tobacco incidents in News Corp. (Fox) films have been relatively few in recent years. In three out of the last five years, 66% or more of News Corp.'s youth-rated films have been smokefree, a record rivaled only by Disney.
- Sony, one of the largest film producer-distributors, has shown no sustained change in tobacco content since the mid-1990s. No more than 40% of Sony's PG13 films were smokefree in any year.
- At Warner Bros., the prolific studio owned by Time Warner, tobacco incidents in youth-rated films declined between 2005 and 2007, but the trend reversed in 2008. Over the last three years, the percentage of Time Warner's youth-rated films that were smokefree dropped below 50% to 39%.
- Viacom's Paramount films have ranged between 25% and 50% smokefree since the late 1990s, displaying no real change.
- Independent producer-distributors (large and small) account for a growing number of theatrical releases. In 2008, indies included a record number of tobacco incidents in their youth-rated films: twice as many as in 2007 and nearly four times as many as in 2006. By last year, only about one in three youth-rated films released by independents was smokefree.

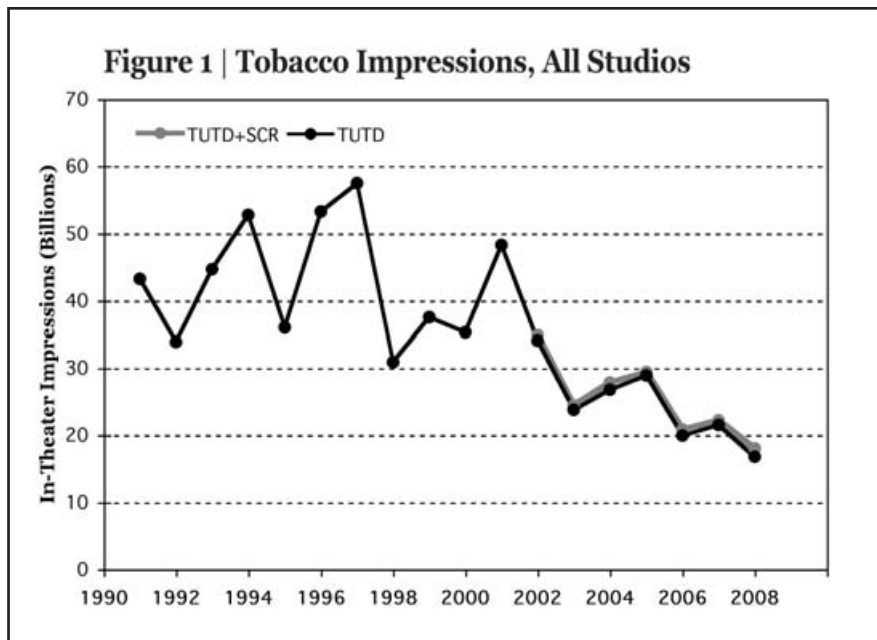

CONCLUSION

- This film survey's evidence of limited progress at some companies, and none at others, suggests that an industry wide solution, including R-rating future smoking, is needed to achieve substantial, permanent reductions in dangerous youth exposure to on-screen smoking.

1. GENERAL OBSERVATIONS

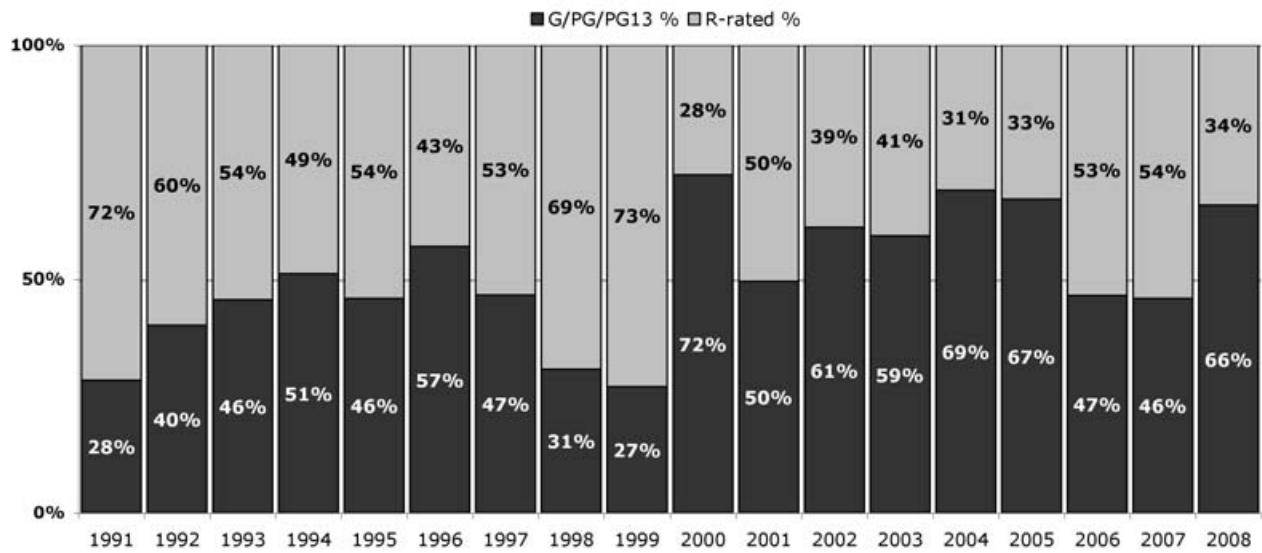

This survey is based on 1,769 films released in U.S. theaters between 1991 and 2008, collected by Breathe California's Thumbs Up! Thumbs Down! (TUTD) project (n = 1566) between 1991 and 2008, supplemented between 2002 and 2008 with information from www.ScreenIt.com for films (n = 203) that did not generate enough box office to be included in the TUTD sample (See APPENDIX A for details of the methodology; detailed results appear in APPENDIX B).

The results show that the motion picture industry delivered an estimated 650 billion tobacco impressions to moviegoers over that time period, peaking at 58 billion per year in 1996. In-theater tobacco impressions (number of tobacco incidents times paid admissions) have fallen by about half since 2002, from 35 billion to 18 billion per year (Figure 1). In-theater impressions are a useful scale of tobacco exposures generated by films, and by different companies, but a limitation of in-theater impressions is that they do not account for additional audience exposure through new, and increasingly popular, channels for viewing films including DVD, cable, on-demand and broadband.

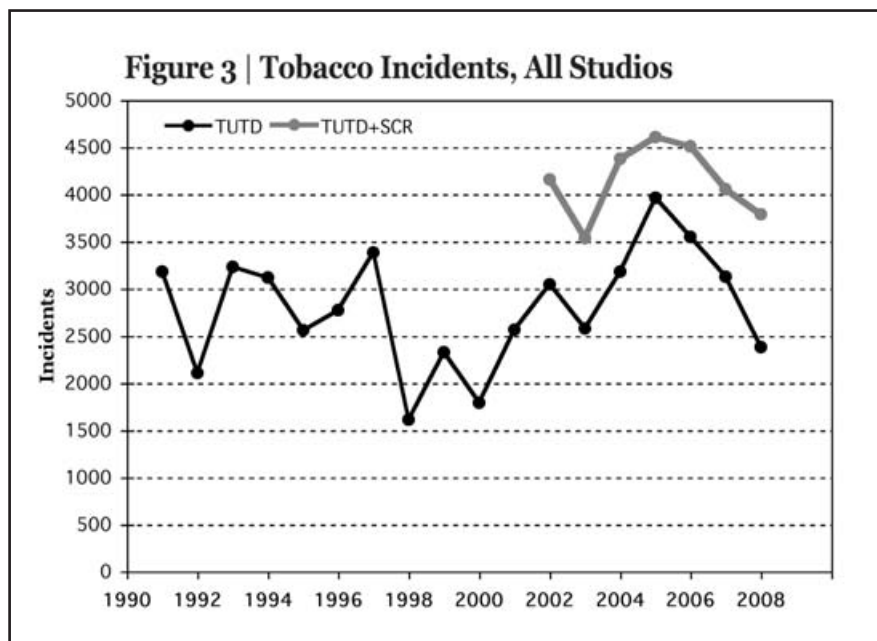

In addition to a drop in in-theater tobacco impressions, a long-term shift has taken place in the rating source of these impressions. In the 1990s, R-rated movies delivered 60% of impressions and youth-rated movies delivered 40%. In this decade, youth-rated movies have delivered 60% and R-rated movies 40% (Figure 2). In 2008, PG13 films delivered 65% of tobacco impressions (11.7/18.1 billion) and G/PG films delivered another 1% (0.2/18.1 billion).

• TOBACCO INCIDENTS

Tobacco incidents display a different path than tobacco impressions (Figure 3). Incidents of tobacco use portrayed in movies more than doubled between 1998 and 2005. They have fallen by 18% (816/4607) over the past four years, but remain higher than at the end of the 1990s.

- SMOKEFREE FILMS

The percentage of films released each year without tobacco imagery has been growing slowly since 1991. Films rated G and PG tend to have the lowest tobacco content; about 70% of these films have been smokefree since 1998. The smokefree share of PG13 films, which adolescents prefer to G/PG films, has sunk as low as 20% in 2002-3, and has remained about 35% since 2005.

The number of smokefree films released each year has increased by half, to 68, since 2003. Typically, more than one-third of smokefree films were rated G or PG in 2008 (25/68). Another 45% (31/68) were rated PG13, and 20% were R-rated.

- INCIDENTS PER FILM

Because the number of film releases, their rating mix (G, PG, PG13 and R), and theater admissions all change from year to year, we calculated the median number of incidents per film released (both smoking and non-smoking), by rating, in an effort to control for these market factors. Again a peak is observed in 1996 and a substantial decline is seen after 2005 (Figure 4).

Only recently have moviegoers been able to expect that a movie rated G or PG will be smokefree or nearly so. Tobacco incidents per PG13 film have been declining since 2003; after years of hovering around 10 incidents per film, PG13 films now show a median of 3-5 incidents (interquartile range: 0 to about 12 incidents per film). R-rated movies are unchanged at around a median of 20 tobacco incidents per film (interquartile range: about 5-50 incidents per film).

2. TRENDS BY MEDIA COMPANY

Individual companies in alphabetical order. Detailed charts for each company and the for the independent film sector appear in APPENDIX B; film lists in APPENDIX C.

• DISNEY

In October 2004, The Disney Company adopted a corporate policy on movie smoking pledging to make future Disney-label movies (G/PG) smokefree and to “discourage” smoking in its PG13 movies, which commonly carry the Touchstone label. Disney’s R-rated, Miramax-labeled films are not covered; exceptions are also reserved for “creative vision.”⁵

From the mid-1990s to 2004, Disney films were a major contributor of tobacco impressions. From 1999 to 2004, for example, its PG13 movies delivered more than a billion tobacco impressions each year, while its R-rated movies delivered another 2-4 billion annually. Starting in 2004, more Disney Company PG13 films were released smokefree: the percentage climbed from 18% in 2003 to 40% in 2008. Its G/PG films, 75% of which were already smokefree for several years before the policy was adopted, were all smokefree in 2006 and 2008. However, tobacco incidents per film have not fallen substantially in Disney’s PG13 films or R-rated films from 2004 levels.

Under a revised business strategy, in recent years the company cut its annual film production (particularly of R-rated films) and this cutback has sharply reduced the company’s “tobacco footprint.” R-rated tobacco impressions have dropped 95% (1.8/1.9 billion) since 2004, almost equaling in number the 91% decline (2.1/2.3 billion) in PG13 impressions. Together, The Disney Company’s production cutbacks and a modest boost in the percentage of PG13 films released smokefree account for 36% (4.0/11.1 billion) of the drop in total tobacco impressions delivered to moviegoers in the last four years, industry wide.

• GENERAL ELECTRIC

Tobacco incidents in films from GE’s NBC Universal subsidiary have dropped 61% (842/1382) in the last two years, the first two-year decline at Universal since we started collecting data in 1991. The incident reduction was in the studio’s R-rated films, not in its youth-rated releases. In 2008, Universal’s PG13 tobacco incidents reached their highest point since 1991 and PG13 tobacco impressions, at nearly 2 billion, were equal to Sony’s and double Time Warner’s. Tobacco incidents per Universal film trended upward for the last ten years, overall, but have recently declined in G/PG films.

Universal’s films, including its PG13 films, are about 25% smokefree, matching Time Warner for the lowest smokefree percentage in the industry. Universal’s R-rated movies are around 20% smokefree, also one of the lowest rates.

Like Disney and Time Warner, Universal Pictures, the studio division of GE's NBC Universal, has published a policy on tobacco depictions. It covers films starting production after April 16, 2007 and states, in part:

As a baseline, Universal Pictures presumes that no smoking incidents should appear in any youth-rated film produced by Universal or any wholly-owned Universal Pictures film label and released in the United States....Smoking incidents may be permitted in a youth-rated film only when there is substantial reason for doing so.⁶

In 2006, the year before its policy went into effect, Universal released 13 youth-rated films in the United States; 10 of them (77%) depicted tobacco use. In 2008, the year after its policy went into effect, Universal released 14 youth-rated films to theaters in the United States; 10 of them (71%) depicted tobacco use.

• NEWS CORPORATION

News Corp.'s Fox Filmed Entertainment unit has shown little change in regard to tobacco since 1991, but its releases have also been relatively low in tobacco content and impact. Its G/PG films were smokefree in five of the past ten years and nearly 60% of its PG13 films were smokefree in 2008. Together, Fox's youth-rated films have been 65-75% smokefree since 2004.

Tobacco incidents per PG13 film at Fox are 43% lower than for the industry overall (10.2/17.8). Still, News Corp.'s youth-rated films have delivered an average of 630 million tobacco impressions annually since 2004, comparable to its R-rated films' 690 million impressions.

• SONY

Sony Pictures and its other labels, such as Columbia and M-G-M, have contributed a large and steady share of tobacco incidents and impressions: 20% (11,500/57,700) of tobacco incidents and 18% (117/651 billion) of tobacco impressions between 1991 and 2008.

As this persistence would suggest, tobacco content has also remained mostly unchanged. In the 1990s, about 20% of Sony's youth-rated films were smokefree; in this decade, 28%. No trends are apparent in Sony's incidents per film, at any rating level.

• TIME WARNER

Like Disney and General Electric, Time Warner has a published corporate policy on movie smoking. Dated July 2007, it declares that "Warner filmed entertainment companies" do not make deals with tobacco companies, but does not extend this to the production companies involved in Warner projects. The policy also declares that Warner companies “endeavor to reduce or eliminate depictions of smoking,” except in R-rated productions where there are “compelling creative reasons for such depictions.”⁷

Since 1991, Warner film units have delivered 24% (156/651 billion) of all tobacco impressions to moviegoers, more than any other producer-distributor. Its 2008 share was 20% (3.5/18.1 billion), second to Viacom’s 35% (6.2/18.1 billion). A two-year decline in tobacco incidents, from a record 1130 incidents in 2005 to a low of 471 incidents in 2007, rebounded upward to 650 incidents in 2008.

The percentage of Time Warner’s films that are smokefree has also fallen recently, from 40% in 2004 to 26% in 2008. The smokefree share of Warner’s youth-rated films reached 50% in 2005; in 2008, it was 39% (7/18). Tobacco incidents per youth-rated film have been essentially unchanged since 2002.

- VIACOM

Viacom’s Paramount unit has not shown a change in total tobacco impressions delivered since 2000. In 2008, impressions soared to match the more than 6 billion tobacco impressions the company’s films delivered in 2000 and 2005, ranking Viacom first in that category.

Even more remarkable is the share of these impressions consistently delivered by Viacom’s PG13 films: around 80% (2008: 5.1/6.2 billion). Tobacco incidents per PG13 film and per R-rated film have both increased in the last year, after a decline beginning in 2004.

- INDEPENDENTS

Independents include any film operation that is not classed as a major nor represented on the board of directors of the Motion Picture Association of America. “Indies” include Lionsgate, The Weinstein Company, DreamWorks (except when it was merged with Viacom in 2006-8), start-ups backed by high-worth individuals, and ephemeral niche producer-distributors.

Since 1999, the independent film sector has launched nearly 240 films that grossed at least $500,000 in theatrical box office — a collective output surpassing that of major studios Disney, Universal, Fox or Paramount.

These independent films were split equally between youth-rated and R-rated films. In 2007 and 2008, independents supplied 20% of films in US theaters and attracted 16% of the box office. Of all youth-rated films released in 2008, more than one in five (28/131) was from the independent film sector, surpassing the output of any major studio.

Coincident with this explosion in the number of youth-rated independent releases was a jump in total PG13-rated tobacco incidents from 100 or fewer in 2005-7 to more than 350 in 2008. As the percentage of youth-rated independent films dropped to 36% last year, the tobacco impressions delivered by these films climbed above a billion.

3. BRAND DISPLAY

Product placement need not involve brand display. Tobacco brands with the greatest market share among adolescents stand to benefit the most from un-branded tobacco depictions as well.

Over the past ten years, the number of films with brand display has, if anything, slightly increased (Table 1). Tobacco brand display has consistently favored Marlboro. Of the 156 movies in the 1991-2008 TUTD sample that include brand display, 88 (56%) featured Marlboro, a Philip Morris brand. Reynolds brands Camel, Kool and Winston appeared in a total of 47 films (30%). As reported by the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Marlboro is the leading brand among US adolescent smokers and Camel is third.⁸

	Median	25th Percentile	75th Percentile
1991-98	7.5	6.3	11.3
1999-03	11	6	13.5
2004-08	11	9	18.5

Since 1991, 37% (68/183) of films known to include tobacco brand display have been youth-rated. Over the same period, the media companies whose films had the most tobacco brand display were Time Warner and Sony (more than 20% share each) followed by Viacom, Disney and GE (> 10%), then News Corp. and the independent film sector (10% each). The three media companies with the highest share of brand display occurring in their youth-rated films were News Corp., Viacom and Sony (nearly 50%).⁹

4. DISCUSSION

This survey of movie smoking trends 1991-2008 finds a substantial reduction in tobacco incidents in movies released to theaters and tobacco impressions delivered to US theater audiences and identifies several factors that contribute to these developments. Some are market-driven and may reverse:

- a shift by producer-distributors away from R-rated movies, which are more likely to depict tobacco use and include more tobacco incidents, toward youth-rated movies, which are less likely to depict smoking and include fewer incidents when they do, on average;
- substantial reductions in film production (particularly R-rated) by Disney, accounting for more than one-third of the drop in tobacco content in recent years;
- declines in tobacco incidents per film at some studios since 2005;
- increases in the percentage of G/PG and of PG13 films that are smokefree, with G/PG percentages approaching 100% and PG13 percentages approaching, and in some cases surpassing, 50%.

Substantial drops in tobacco impressions observed here may not represent the changes in total exposure because these estimates do not include impressions delivered through DVD, television or the Internet. Actual change in total impressions delivered depends on the relationship between viewing films in theaters and through these other media and whether, and how, that relationship changes over time. In addition, while there has been some progress, 12 billion tobacco impressions still were delivered by youth-rated movies in theaters alone in 2008, nearly twice as many impressions as were delivered by R-rated films.

The growing number of smokefree youth-rated films released by the motion picture industry — approaching 50% of all youth-rated movies for the first time in 10 years — and reductions in incidents in some studios' films demonstrate that it is possible to make successful films without tobacco imagery and unnecessary to include tobacco imagery in youth-rated films in order to attract large audiences.

Heterogeneity of response to this public health challenge by the major studios, regression by independent producer-distributors, and uneven progress among the companies that have declared some support for change all suggest that a permanent industry-wide policy solution — the R rating — is still needed to eliminate youth-rated films as an important promoter of smoking among young people.

APPENDIX A | METHODOLOGY

Thumbs Up! Thumbs Down! (TUTD) sends trained observers into theaters every week to count the number of tobacco incidents and other characteristics (such as the presence of a specific tobacco brand) in the films ranked among the top 10 in national box office sales the previous week. The results (and an archive of all films analyzed) are available at www.scenesmoking.org.

The number of tobacco impressions delivered to theatrical audiences is estimated by multiplying the number of incidents per film by its total paid admissions. Admissions are computed by dividing the film’s US box office gross, as reported at www.imdbpro.com, by the average ticket price for the year in which the film was released. Ticket prices are obtained from the National Association of Theatre Owners at www.natoonline.org/ticketprices. The TUTD film sample beginning in 2002, supplemented by films not in the top 10, whose tobacco content data was obtained from www.ScreenIt.com, captures about 96% of the domestic box office reported by the Motion Picture Association of America (www.mpa.org).

- ADJUSTMENT FOR CHANGE IN SAMPLING SIZE

Between 1991 and 2001, the TUTD sample of films consisted of the top grossing 50 films each year (with the year defined as May 1 through April 30). Beginning in 2002, TUTD included any film that was among the top 10 grossing films for any week. As a result, starting in 2002, the sample increased from around 50 films per year to around 150 per year (Table A-1). There are not 50 films in the sample each calendar year in the early years because the top 50 list was for films released May to April and the distribution of months including the top 50 films varied from year to year. To use these data to examine long-term trends, we need to adjust total incidents and numbers of smokefree films, for earlier years, for this difference in sampling frame. (Per film results do not need any adjustment.)

The first question is whether there is any systematic difference in the average number of incidents per film in the early sample (1991-2001) based on the top 50 films per year and the later sample (2002-2008) based on the top 10 films per week. Because, at the time of this procedure, final ticket sales for 2008 were not available, we dropped 2008 from the comparison. For each calendar year, we identified the films that would have been in the Top 50 list (using the April start of year, as in the early sample).

Year	N
1992	48
1993	54
1994	45
1995	54
1996	47
1997	57
1998	47
1999	49
2000	48
2001	47
2002	137
2003	141
2004	144
2005	143
2006	161

We then compared the average number of incidents in films that would have been in the top 50 list with those that would not have been during the 2002-7 years using a t-test. There were slightly fewer incidents in the films not in the top 50 list than in it (mean of 21.5 incidents vs. 23.0 incidents), but this difference was not statistically significant ($P=0.575$, Table A-2).

We also investigated whether there was a systematic difference between films in and out of the top 50 after adjusting for time (in a linear regression) and rating (in an ANOVA); neither analysis revealed a significant

Top 50	Mean	SD	SEM	N
Yes	23.0	41.3	2.4	305
No	2.15	36.0	1.5	579

difference in incidents in and out of the top 50 ($P=0.552$ and 0.497 , respectively). Thus, we can conclude that there was no systematic difference in the appearance of smoking and other tobacco incidents associated with the change in sampling frame.

We also need to adjust for differences in sample size when computing total number of incidents (and impressions) per year. There was no systematic difference in the fraction of Top 10 films in the Top 50 list from year to year ($P=0.579$ by chi-square). Of the 884 films from 2002-7, 305 (34.5%) were in the top 50 list. Therefore, on average there were $884/305 = 2.9$ times as many films in the sample in the later years than the earlier years.

Therefore, to adjust for differences in the size of the sample and the fact that there were slightly fewer incidents on average in films outside the top 50, we multiplied total incident counts in 1991-2001 by $2.9 \times (21.5/23.0) = 2.7$. In order to maintain whole numbers for counts of smokefree films, we used a multiplier of 3 in the early years.

The fact that the sample is smaller in the 1991-2001 years means that the estimates are correspondingly less precise than in the later years. In particular, in several of the early years, no independent film made it into the top 50 list, so our estimates of the amount of smoking in these films is 0, which is certainly not the case. The small numbers of films with a given rating for a given studio sometimes mean that it is not possible to estimate interquartile ranges for the number of incidents and impressions, for that year, for that rating and studio.

- CALIBRATION OF SCREENIT DATA

The TUTD data set captures the films that people are most likely to see, but there are many other films that reach smaller audiences, either because they are specialty films or because they flop. In order to provide a more comprehensive assessment of studio output, we used www.ScreenIt.com, a web site that provides detailed assessment of the content of films for parents. ScreenIt rates smoking in films on a 6 point scale (none to extreme). There were ScreenIt ratings for 1308 films in the TUTD sample. Table A-3 shows the number of incidents for each ScreenIt score.

ScreenIt	Mean Incidents	SEM	25th Percentile	Median	75th Percentile	N
None	0.58	0.13	0.0	0.0	0.00	448
Minor	9.00	0.45	3.0	6.0	12.00	388
Mild	28.02	1.41	15.0	22.0	33.50	245
Moderate	52.23	2.56	30.0	47.0	67.00	139
Heavy	83.12	5.02	60.0	76.5	100.75	42
Extreme	124.44	10.57	76.5	106.0	144.50	45

While there is substantial variation in these calibration factors for individual films, the Central Limit Theorem indicates that the variation should tend to cancel out when summing (or averaging) over many films. To investigate whether one could use the mean ScreenIt incident counts as calibration factors, we used those calibration factors to estimate the total number of incidents and smokefree films in the TUTD films over time. Figure A-1 shows that this procedure provides a reasonable estimates of these variables.

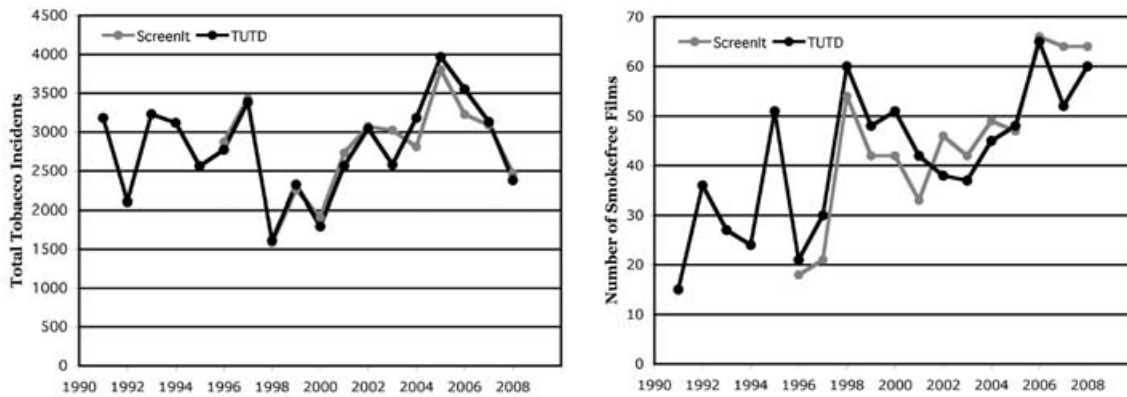

Based on this result, we used the mean calibration factors in Table A-3 to estimate the number of incidents and smokefree films during 2002-8 that were delivered in the 203 films that had ScreenIt ratings but were not in the TUTD sample. (We started in 2002 because that was the first year for the top 10 TUTD sample.)

Because of the variability in ScreenIt calibrations for individual films, we did not include the ScreenIt film data when estimating per film values.

- COMPARISON WITH EARLIER REPORTS

The number of incidents (and, as a result, impressions) in this report are higher than in our earlier reports.¹ The reason for this difference is that the earlier reports were employed estimates based on ScreenIt scores calibrated against the number of smoking incidents reported by Dartmouth’s film coding group.² The Dartmouth group uses a different set of rules to record smoking incidents than TUTD. If a scene cuts back and forth between shots of two people, one of whom is smoking, Dartmouth counts the entire scene as one smoking incident; TUTD counts each cut as a separate incident.

INDEPENDENTS

Survey includes: All live-action, English-language, US-produced theatrical features grossing at least $500,000 produced and/or distributed by DreamWorks, Lions Gate, and other so-called independents. Listed by year, by G/PG/PG-13 or R/NC-17 rating, alphabetically within groups. Movies with tobacco imagery are boldface.

LIONSGATE, THE WEINSTEIN COMPANY & OTHER INDIES' 10-YEAR RECORDS, 1999-2008

Note: DreamWorks was acquired by Viacom (Paramount) in 2006 and became independent again in 2008. Viacom sold DreamWorks SKG's film library to a group headed by George Soros. This film library is reported here. DreamWorks' 2006 and 2007 releases are reported in the Viacom studio survey.
