New Release:Mukat's Last GiftMortuary Customs Among the Cahuilla Indians

by Lowell J. Bean

Death is a universal experience that every culture must explain and deal with, and associated rituals are often the central focus of a society's religious life. In this absorbing study, anthropologist Lowell J. Bean draws upon fifty years of personal research and over a century of observations by others to present a detailed account of the many ways in which the creation story of the Cahuilla Indians of Southern California—in concert with the complex ceremonies surrounding death and the journey of the soul to the afterlife—explained, validated, and was interwoven into the entire life of a community coping with an occasionally harsh and unpredictable environment.

Medicinal Plants Used by Native American Tribes in Southern California

Donna Largo, Daniel F. McCarthy, Marcia Roper, RD, CDE

A 57-page resource guide for medical providers and traditional health care practitioners created in an effort to better coordinate patient care with traditional Native American practices. This book also makes information available about traditional medicine to anyone interested in disease prevention through Native American knowledge and traditions.

Plants have always played an important role in human history providing not only food, but clothing, shelter, and medicine. Many plants contain hundreds of chemicals, and most have many active ingredients. Native American knowledge of plant uses is extensive—current knowledge extends to more than one thousand plants that were used by all Native Americans, and that is just a fraction of what was once known and used before European contact. Foods introduced by Europeans soon replaced traditional foods, but out of necessity, the practice of traditional plant medicine has survived.

Through interviews with tribal elders, as well as information passed down to younger generations, this book highlights thirty-one plants commonly used by Southern California Native American Tribes, which is the limited focus of this study. There are many more medicinal plants that we have documented, but we do not have the necessary data or chemical analysis to include them in this current project.
