Preface

I. Background

The following is a print version of an online dictionary created for Sibe (IPA: [ɕivə]; script: right image)¹, a Tungusic language spoken by the Sibe people of Northwestern Xinjiang, China. At the time of this writing, the main editor of the dictionary, Jacob Kodner, is a third-year undergraduate student of linguistics at the University of California, Irvine². Self-taught and proficient in Mandarin, the editor touched base with Meng Rong Lu (孟荣路), a Sibe individual from Chabchal County³ via WeChat in April 2021. Meng Rong Lu, the primary linguistic correspondent for this project, is at the age of 43 years-old at the time of writing, and is a native speaker of Sibe. He is also fluent in Mandarin Chinese—which was the language of communication between the collaborators.

Sibe is noted to be a descendant and heir of what is known as the Manchu language of Manchuria, a region in part of Northeast China. Around the 16th century, the Sibe people were living in Manchuria, and they were later relocated to Xinjiang and specifically Chabchal in 1764 (cf. Zikmundová 2013 for a historical context and overview of the Sibe-Manchu relation). With respect to the Manchu language, the language is noted to be critically endangered by UNESCO, and there is an estimate of around 12 native speakers who are located in the Heilongjiang province of China (Meng Rong Lu, personal communication). In terms of the status of the Sibe language, it is noted by UNESCO to be a severely endangered language. A recent estimate puts the number of Sibe speakers in Xinjiang to be around 20,000 individuals, though those proficient in the language is estimated to be lower due to an ongoing linguistic shift to Mandarin Chinese (Meng Rong Lu, personal communication). Due to the current status of Sibe,

² This project was funded by the UC Irvine Undergraduate Research Opportunities Program (UROP) grant 09011s1 and Summer Undergraduate Research Program (SURP) grant 57105s1.

³ Chapchal, alternative spelled as Qapqal (Simplified Chinese: 察布查尔锡伯自治县), is an autonomous county for the Sibe people located in the Ili Kazakh Autonomous Prefecture (Simplified Chinese: 伊犁哈萨克自治州) of Xinjiang, China.

this dictionary was created with three objectives in mind for different audiences, which are outlined in (1) below:

- (1) a. For native speakers: to learn the written language
- b. For non-native speakers: to learn the spoken and written language
- c. For the academic community: to provide linguistic data for research purposes

The specific structure of the dictionary’s entries—which are discussed in detail in the Methodology section—was created in order to address these objectives. For instance, the traditional Manchu script version of lexemes are provided to meet objective (1a), and audio recordings and translations of lexemes are included to meet objective (1b).

II. Methodology

The present version of the dictionary was worked on from June to December 2021, and the majority of the time spent on the project was dedicated to collecting and processing entries. Each entry is coded with a number based on the order in which the lexeme (spoken version) appears in the alphabet, and the data points collected and processed for each entry are listed below in (2)—with a sample entry outlined in (3):

- | | |
|--|-------------------|
| (2) Entry # | (3) Entry #1188 |
| a. Spoken (romanized) version | a. honcirem |
| b. Audio recording of spoken version | b. 1188.wav |
| c. IPA transcription of spoken version | c. χonteirum |
| d. Written (romanized) version | d. honcarambi |
| e. Written version in Manchu script | e. (to the right) |
| f. Mandarin translation | f. 打呼噜 |
| g. English translation | g. to snore |

The data collection process started with Meng Rong Lu creating a list of lexemes, which was done by consulting the written Manchu terms in Kengo Yamamoto’s A Classified Dictionary of Spoken Manchu and translating them into spoken Sibe. The terms in spoken Sibe (eventually becoming (2a)) and the written forms (2d) were grouped together as individual lexemes on a spreadsheet, and each lexeme received an individual number code (i.e., the entry number). Each lexeme was also given a translation in Mandarin Chinese (2f). Meng Rong Lu then recorded himself pronouncing the spoken version of each lexeme and converted the recordings into .wav files named after the code (as shown in (2b))⁴. A spreadsheet with the components collected for each coded lexeme (i.e., (2a), (2b), (2d), and (2f)) was sent to the main editor.

The spreadsheet received by the main editor from Meng Rong Lu was then uploaded to a cloud-based spreadsheet editor. The main editor proceeded to use an online tool⁵ he personally developed to convert the romanized forms of spoken lexemes into IPA. The transcription schema can be found in the Provisional Inventory section of this resource, which we note to be specific to this dictionary and subject to change. In addition to IPA, the main editor included images⁶ of the written form of lexemes written in traditional Manchu script. There have been documented issues with rendering Manchu script on different browsers and software, so in order to remedy these issues, static images of the script were chosen over Unicode.

Finally, the main editor translated all of the Mandarin translations from Meng Rong Lu into English. For accuracy purposes, both Manchu-Chinese and Manchu-English dictionaries were consulted, including Manchu.Work (满族空间) and Jerry Norman's A Comprehensive Manchu-English Dictionary. Any words that were considered by the main editor and Mandarin speakers to be unclear and/or difficult to translate were run past Meng Rong Lu for assistance. Upon completion of the translation process, the entire spreadsheet was checked for errors multiple times by both the main editor and Meng Rong Lu, and then was converted into this PDF version.

⁴ Some entries did not have audio recordings, and these are marked with * next to the entry number.

⁵ The online tool, originally named Manchu to IPA, takes a specific romanization system developed by Meng Rong Lu as input, and outputs IPA. The tool can be found at: <https://jkodner.github.io/ManchuIPA.github.io/>
