good reasons to subscribe to the Journal of Social History

- The resource function, as a central publication for articles of quality, in a growing field of historical inquiry. The Journal has played a consistent role in helping to define new approaches and topics in social history during its fourteen years of publication.
- Increasing emphasis on thematic issues, toward further service in staking out key conceptual themes in the field. Coming up, in the next two volume years, are thematic issues on applied social policy history; the history of love and emotionality; the relationship between social and political history.
- Book service for individual subscribers. The Journal offers books at 25% discount from 14 major publishers in history and related areas. (Further information on request.)

Annual subscription rates: $30.00 institutions; $17.00 individuals; $12.00 students. Add $2.00 outside U.S.

Subscriptions should be addressed to Journal of Social History, Carnegie-Mellon University, Pittsburgh, PA 15213.
