

UCLA

UCLA Electronic Theses and Dissertations

Title

A Window into the Tenth Century: The Life and Literary Works of Anania of Narek

Permalink

<https://escholarship.org/uc/item/41d7d655>

Author

Arlen, Jesse Siragan

Publication Date

2021

Peer reviewed|Thesis/dissertation

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles

A Window into the Tenth Century:

The Life and Literary Works of Anania of Narek

A dissertation submitted in partial satisfaction of the requirements for the degree Doctor of Philosophy in Near Eastern Languages and Cultures

by

Jesse Siragan Arlen

2021

© Copyright by
Jesse Siragan Arlen
2021

ABSTRACT OF THE DISSERTATION

A Window into the Tenth Century:
The Life and Literary Works of Anania of Narek

by

Jesse Siragan Arlen

Doctor of Philosophy in Near Eastern Languages and Cultures

University of California, Los Angeles, 2021

Professor S. Peter Cowe, Chair

This dissertation revolves around the literary works and activities of a significant but little known figure of the tenth century AD, Anania of Narek. To date, no monograph has been written on him in a Western language, nor have any of his books been translated. The goal of this project is to contextualize his works and recover his impact on several of the primary developments in the Near East and Mediterranean that marked his era and in so doing offer a novel view into the multifaceted and interconnected worlds of the period's various and competing ethnoreligious communities. Anania was the first abbot of Narek monastery, which was founded during a regional explosion of cenobitic monastic institutions. Through a reading of his Book of Instruction and other sources, I present a picture of the intellectual and ascetic-mystical educational system he initiated there. This system became the crucible that formed several of the leading figures of the next generation, including Uxtanēs of Sebasteia and Grigor of Narek. One of the first of the major medieval monastic academies, Narek became a model for later ones that endured throughout the Armenian oikoumené as intellectual and artistic centers into the early modern period. Anania also was caught up at the center of the Tʿondrakian controversy, which had its origins in a Christian community existing outside the structure of the official church in the borderlands between the Byzantine Empire and ʿAbbāsīd Caliphate. Through a careful reexamination of the sources, I offer a new perspective on the development of “Tʿondrakecʿi” as a heretical epithet and explain how ascetic figures such as Anania could be denounced as such by the official church hierarchy. Anania was also at the forefront of the Armenian Church’s self-defense vis-à-vis the assimilationist agenda of the Byzantine Church and Empire in its eastward expansion. Reading his Root of Faith alongside other contemporaneous texts, I reconstruct the vardapets’ (theological doctors) defense of their church’s right to autonomous existence and their self-presentation as preservers of the faith of early Christianity, in universal consensus and communion with the other Christian communities living outside of the Byzantine Empire in Egypt, Ethiopia, the Middle East, the Caucasus, India, and China.

The dissertation of Jesse Siragan Arlen is approved.

Sebouh David Aslanian

Michael David Cooperson

Timothy William Greenwood

Hagop Kouloujian

S. Peter Cowe, Committee Chair

University of California, Los Angeles

2021

Dedicated to the memory of Tenny Christiana Arlen

Առ շարժումն անձին՝ յիշատակ

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | |
|--|------------|
| ACKNOWLEDGMENTS | IX |
| VITA | XIV |
| INTRODUCTION | 1 |
| LITERATURE REVIEW | 3 |
| The Publication of Anania's Writings | 3 |
| Scholarship on Anania's Life and Literary Works | 8 |
| METHODOLOGY AND GOALS OF THE STUDY | 12 |
| ORDER OF CHAPTERS | 14 |
| CHAPTER 1 BACKGROUND TO ANANIA OF NAREK'S LIFE AND WORKS: AN OVERVIEW OF MAJOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENTS | 19 |
| A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE MID-NINTH TO MID-ELEVENTH CENTURIES | 20 |
| ARMENIA AMID CENTRIFUGAL POLITICAL TRENDS IN THE CALIPHATE | 22 |
| Armenia Between the Conflicting Poles of Caliphal Integration and Separatism | 27 |
| Armenian Revolts of the Eighth Century and Changes to the Naxarar Social Structure | 31 |
| The Migration of Arab Tribes and the Establishment of Emirates | 32 |
| Contextual Factors Related to the Establishment of Armenian Kingship | 36 |
| The Making of Armenian Kings | 37 |
| Gagik Arcruni and the Founding of Narek Monastery | 41 |
| Narek and New Trends in Armenian Monastic Life | 44 |
| ARMENIA AMID BYZANTINE EXPANSION..... | 46 |
| CHAPTER 2 THE FOUNDATION OF THE MONASTERY OF NAREK IN THE CONTEXT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC BOOM AND THE AMBITIONS OF ARMENIAN DYNASTS | 56 |
| REGIONAL ECONOMIC BOOM..... | 58 |
| Taxation | 60 |
| Trade | 63 |
| Urbanization | 65 |
| Division of Labor, Manufacturing, Artisanal Crafts, and Merchants | 67 |
| Literacy and Training | 69 |
| Agricultural Innovation | 72 |
| Mining, Minting, and Monetization | 73 |
| The Economy and Building Projects | 75 |
| THE BUILDING ACTIVITY OF ARMENIAN DYNASTS AMID INTERNAL COMPETITION | 76 |
| From Apostasy to Pious Patronage: Arcruni Expansion Across Vaspurakan | 78 |
| More Building Activity Amid the Centralizing Efforts of Gagik Arcruni | 89 |

| | |
|---|------------|
| Narekavank [՛] : Making a Spiritual-Intellectual Center at the Ecclesiastical and Political Capital | 100 |
| Monastic Foundations and Armenian Dynastic Rivalry | 104 |
| THE FOUNDATION OF NAREKAVANK [՛] : THE AGENTS AND THE DATE | 112 |
| THE NEW CENOBITIC MONASTIC FOUNDATIONS | 129 |
| CHAPTER 3 THE MAKING OF A MONASTIC ACADEMY: INTELLECTUAL AND ASCETIC-MYSTICAL EDUCATION AT NAREK MONASTERY | 132 |
| THE EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM AT NAREKAVANK [՛] | 135 |
| Scripture and Liturgy | 135 |
| ‘External’ Writings: The Trivium | 139 |
| ‘Subtle’ Writings: Patristics | 142 |
| Ascetic Training, Spiritual Exercises, and Virtue Ethics | 147 |
| Writing and the Use of Texts to Aid the Ascetic-Mystical Quest | 156 |
| CHAPTER 4 UNIFORMITY AND PLURALITY IN AN AGE OF DYNAMIC CHANGE: ANANIA, THE T[՛]ONDRAKITES, AND INTERNAL ECCLESIASTICAL AND SOCIETAL CRISES | 163 |
| THE PRINCIPAL SOURCES..... | 167 |
| DYNAMISM AND SOCIETAL UPHEAVAL..... | 172 |
| Political Instability and Charismatic Leaders of Popular Movements: Bābak and the Khurammī; Smbat and the T[՛]ondrakites | 172 |
| Economic Inequality and Revolts in Siwnik[՛] | 180 |
| ECCLESIASTICAL CRISES AND CONTROVERSIES..... | 187 |
| Separatism and Centrifugal Tendencies in Siwnik[՛] and Caucasian Albania | 187 |
| Dissidence and Ecclesiological Dispute: The Case of Xosrov Anjewac[՛]i | 192 |
| T[՛]ondrakec[՛]i: The Invention of a Heretical Type | 194 |
| The Application of the “T[՛]ondrakec[՛]i” Label to Ascetic Figures | 200 |
| Anania of Narek and the T[՛]ondrakec[՛]i label | 204 |
| CHAPTER 5 ANANIA OF NAREK AND ARMENIAN RESPONSES TO BYZANTINE EXPANSION | 215 |
| ECCLESIASTICAL DIPLOMACY AS A BRANCH OF BYZANTINE FOREIGN POLICY | 216 |
| THE RESETTLEMENT OF MIAPHYSITE CHRISTIANS INTO IMPERIAL TERRITORY | 221 |
| CATHOLICOS ANANIA MOKAC [՛] I AND THE BEGINNINGS OF CHALCEDONIAN TENSION..... | 222 |
| CATHOLICOS XAČ [՛] IK ARŠARUNI AND CONFESSIONAL CONFLICT IN IMPERIAL TERRITORY..... | 226 |
| Diverse Armenian Responses to Byzantine Expansion | 228 |
| The Response of the Leading Vardapets to the Byzantine Policy of Assimilation | 232 |
| Action on the Ground: Rebaptism | 233 |
| Action on the Ground: New Episcopal Sees and Religious Violence | 235 |
| Action with the Pen: The Literary Defense | 237 |
| CONCLUSION | 253 |
| APPENDIX A: LIFE OF ANANIA FROM A YAYSMAWURK[՛] (SYNAXARION) | 259 |

| | |
|---|------------|
| APPENDIX B: REIGNS OF DYNASTS AND CATHOLICOI | 261 |
| BAGRATUNI | 261 |
| ARCRUNI (VASPURAKAN) | 261 |
| CATHOLICOI | 262 |
| SEE OF CATHOLICATE | 262 |
| BIBLIOGRAPHY | 263 |
| ABBREVIATIONS | 263 |
| ANCIENT LITERATURE | 265 |
| Arabic | 265 |
| Armenian | 265 |
| Greek | 271 |
| Latin | 272 |
| Syriac | 272 |
| MODERN LITERATURE | 274 |

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

A decade of postgraduate study in three different academic institutions requires expression of profound gratitude to the many supporting individuals and foundations who made those years of study possible.

The members of my dissertation committee have supported me above and beyond my expectations. I am forever indebted to Peter Cowe, my advisor and committee chair, for the hundreds of hours spent with me over the last six years in private tutorials and meetings, in his office and on Zoom. In addition to generously imparting to me from the vast treasure house of his mind a wealth of knowledge concerning the over sixteen-hundred-year Armenian literary intellectual tradition, he has sharpened and improved my philological skills, critical reasoning, and academic writing. He challenged me to expand the scope of my topic from its original concept (a translation and study of Anania's Book of Instruction) and provided invaluable critical feedback on multiple drafts of each chapter. I am grateful for his patience and professionalism throughout our many meetings over Zoom, and his generosity in sharing ideas, insights, and analyses with me, not all of which I have been able to cite in the footnotes. I could not have asked for a better advisor. It is in Hagop Kouloujian's Western Armenian classes during my undergraduate degree that I first felt the sound of Armenian on my tongue and thanks to his inspired teaching that I fell in love with the language and its literature. By sharing the beauty of the culture with me, I found a new home in this world. Hagop was the first to give me a vision of what my scholarly career could be, and it is also in his classes that I first encountered the mystical religious poetry of Grigor of Narek, which has been my companion ever since and from which years later grew the idea to study the works of Grigor's mentor and spiritual father, Anania. I am grateful as well for his many observations on the translations and analysis in this study. Even more than his teaching and mentorship, I am grateful for his friendship and the literal and figurative sense of home he and his family have provided me and mine. Sebouh Aslanian has been a second advisor to me throughout my doctoral degree, supporting my professional and academic development. I am particularly grateful for his introducing me to the field of global/world history and demonstrating the possibilities and applicability of this approach to Armenian topics. He has sharpened my skills as a historical thinker and in many frank conversations has “pulled back the curtain” on some of the cryptic ways and norms by which academia and academics operate — a valuable task that every good mentor should do for their students. I am grateful to Timothy Greenwood of the University of St. Andrews for agreeing to serve on my dissertation committee. His expertise in this period of history saved me from many errors and misrepresentations of the material. He meticulously read each chapter and offered copious comments, insights, reflections, and ideas for future research, always with a kind and gentle tone. Many of them I was not able to incorporate into this dissertation, but they will be taken up in revision of this study into a book. I am grateful to Michael Cooperson and his immensely practical classes and teaching, which initiated me into the field of premodern Arabic studies and gave me the ability to work with primary and secondary materials. At this stage of the project, I have not been able to make as much use of Arabic materials as I had planned, but I plan to incorporate more into future work on this and other topics. It has been a privilege and great honor for me to have the guidance of these five brilliant and learned men from the beginning to the end of this project.

I would like to thank others at UCLA: Kara Cooney, Isamara Ramirez, Tiffany Chen, Barbara Van Nostrand, Emma Watson, Johanna Romero, and Chérie Francis, who provided administrative assistance throughout my degree; the librarians at the Young Research Library who fulfilled many InterLibrary Loan and other requests; the professors under whom I gained teaching experience and the students who made teaching rewarding and enjoyable; the Classics Department for providing me with opportunities to teach outside my own department, and for the warmth and graciousness of its professors with whom I had a chance to work closely, especially David Blank and Bryant Kirkland.

I am grateful for the camaraderie and collaboration with my fellow Armenian studies graduate students at UCLA, who became like a large, extended family: Anatolii Tokmantcev, Rosie Vartyter Aroush, Sona Tajiryan, Christine Thomassian, Jennifer Manoukian, Daniel Ohanian, Ani Honarchian, Anahit Pogossian, Lilit Ghazaryan, Armen Adamian, Natalie Kamajian, Arpi Melikyan, Ani Shahinian, and Daniel Fittante; and also those in other areas, especially Catherine Illingworth, Christopher PreJean, Wisam Alshaibi, Cameron Zargar, Andrew Danielson, and Jasmine Akiyama-Kim, among others.

Among faculty at Notre Dame, I would like to express particular gratitude to my advisor Blake Leyerle as well as Joseph Amar, with whom I learned Syriac. At Wheaton College, I would like to thank my advisor Jeffrey Barbeau as well as Karen Jobes, with whom I gained my first experience in academic publishing. The friends and colleagues I made among my fellow graduate students at both institutions are too many to name.

There have been many professors and scholars who over the years have generously offered me their input, advice, and wisdom, and made me to feel that I belong in the academic community. Among them, I would like to name Kendrick Walker, Bishop Daniel Findikyan, Archbishop Levon Zekian, Abraham Terian, Krikor Beledian, Roberta Ervine, Marc Nichanian, Robin Darling Young, James R. Russell, Vartan Matiossian, Sergio La Porta, Zara Pogossian, Bedross Der Matossian, and Theo van Lint.

I was fortunate in my postgraduate years to be the recipient of a number of scholarships and fellowships. Support from the Dolores Zohrab Liebmann Fellowship (2018–2021) and the Andrew W. Mellon Predoctoral Fellowship for Research on Minorities in the Middle East & North Africa (2020–2021) relieved me of teaching duties in the last year of my degree, allowing me to focus on completing the dissertation. I am grateful for the other awards and fellowships I received that supported my degree at UCLA, including the Charles E. and Sue K. Young Graduate Student Fellowship Award (2020–2021), the Mangasar M. Mangasarian Scholarship (2018–2020), the academic year and summer term Graduate Research Mentorships (2017–2018), and the Graduate Assistance in Areas of National Need Fellowship for Middle East & North Africa Studies (funded by the U.S. Department of Education, 2016–2017). I would also like to express my gratitude to the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation and the National Association for Armenian Studies and Research for travel grants.

The bulk of this dissertation was written during the pandemic. I would like to thank two people in particular whose regular contact kept me intellectually stimulated, motivated, and deeply enriched during this time. Chris PreJean was a few months ahead in the dissertation writing stage, and we established the practice of having monthly phone conversations to check in on each other's progress, share strategies and tips, encourage each other, and — sometimes — commiserate. Beginning in July 2020, James Russell and I met together by phone on a weekly basis on Thursday evenings to study the Psalms in Hebrew. Working through the Hebrew text of dozens of canonical and non-canonical Psalms, the Rabbinic commentaries and reflections upon them, and all the other literary, religious, and cultural connections, intertextualities, and implications that Prof. Russell brought into each session made for one of the most intellectually enriching and spiritually meaningful reading groups I have ever had the privilege to be a part of.

I would like to thank both of them for the gift that their presence was to me throughout the last year.

Finally, I would like to thank my family: my father, from whom I inherited a love of languages, great books, theology, and religious history; my mother, for her unconditional love and unfailing interest in all that I do; each of my five siblings (and their spouses and children): Charissa, Tim, Faith, Tenny (†2015), and Christen; my in-laws: Dana, Shari, and Alec. My deepest gratitude goes to my wife, Meghan, who has been by my side during these many years of postgraduate study, who has moved across the country and back in order to do so, who believes in the value of my work, who pushes me toward the highest good, who makes life beautiful.

VITA

- 2015 Master of Arts, Early Christian Studies, University of Notre Dame
- 2013 Master of Arts, Historical Theology, Wheaton College (Illinois)
- 2011 Bachelor of Arts, Linguistics, summa cum laude, University of California, Los Angeles

Arlen, Jesse Siragan. “Armenian.” In Eastern Christianity: A Reader, edited by J. Edward Walters, 143–199. Grand Rapids, MI: Wm. B. Eerdmans, 2021.

_____. “The Urban/Rural Divide in the Early Modern Period: A Microhistorical Study of an Episode in Joseph Emin’s Life and Adventures.” Journal of the Society for Armenian Studies 27 no. 1 (2020): 70–84.

_____. “Ընկերութիւն, սէր եւ գրելու մղումը Քրիստոսիան Բատիկեանի Մետալէ երազներ վէպին մէջ (Friendship, Love, and the Urge to Write in Christian Batikian’s novel Metal Dreams).” Pakine 59 no. 1 (2020): 70–80.

_____. “Texts for Keeping Watch: The Hymns of the Night of Ephrem of Nisibis and the Book of Lamentation of Gregory of Narek.” Viator: Medieval and Renaissance Studies 49 no. 2 (2018): 1–23.

_____. “Gišeroi ke ‘urdk’ (Hymns of the Night): Seven Madrāše of Ephrem the Syrian Preserved in Armenian.” Hugoye: Journal of Syriac Studies 21 no. 2 (2018): 267–318.

_____. “Ո՞ր են բանալիներդ՝ An Innovative Method for Teaching Western Armenian in Diaspora.” In Western Armenian in the 21st Century: Challenges and New Approaches, edited by Barlow Der Mugrdechian and Bedross Der Matossian, 37–58. Armenian Series no. 7. Fresno: California State University Press, 2018.

_____. “Armenian Manuscripts in the Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana.” Manuscripta: A Journal for Manuscript Research 62 no. 1 (2018): 1–31.

_____. “The Debate over the Theory of Names in Origen’s Contra Celsum.” Journal of TAK 42 no. 2 (2018): 59–70.

_____. “‘Let us Mourn Continuously:’ John Chrysostom and the Early Christian Transformation of Mourning.” Studia Patristica 83 (2017): 289–312.

_____. “Psalms.” In Discovering the Septuagint: A Guided Reader, edited by Karen H. Jobes, 175–197, 200–203. Grand Rapids, MI: Kregel Academic, 2016.

INTRODUCTION

This dissertation centers on Anania of Narek (Anania Narekac'i, ca. 910–990),¹ who is known as the first abbot of Narek monastery (Narekavank)² and as the relative, teacher, and spiritual father of Grigor of Narek (ca. 945–1003). Although Anania was one of the most influential figures of his generation, his importance and impact both on regional developments and on the subsequent Armenian intellectual tradition has only recently begun to garner the attention they deserve. His neglect and general absence from historiography of the period is due to several different factors. First, he became entangled in a contemporary ecclesiastical controversy — the T'ondrakian crisis, on which more below — that marred his reputation within the Armenian church establishment and may have led to the suppression of some of his works. Only a fragment remains of the work that he was best known for in the generations that immediately followed his, Refutation of the T'ondrakians [Հակահատուքիւն ընդդէմ Թոնդրակեցւոց]. Then, due to the coincidence of his first name, “Anania,” with other figures of that same name in the Armenian literary tradition,³ several of his works were incorrectly attributed by early generations of modern scholarship, which further obscured his legacy. Finally, the majority of his works were not available outside of manuscripts until 2011, when his extant literary oeuvre was properly established and published in complete form for the first time.⁴ To date, none of his books have been translated into a modern western language, and so he remains largely beyond the purview of the western academic community.

¹ All dates are anno Domini (AD), unless otherwise noted. In general, I follow the Hübschmann-Meillet system for the transliteration of Old Armenian terms and names, but the Library of Congress system for bibliography. Citations will generally be abbreviated with full references available in the bibliography. Armenian fonts are rendered via “HG Hay,” developed by Hagop Gulludjian (Kouloujian), whom I thank for giving me permission to use.

² Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 544, p. 98.

³ In particular Anania of Širak (ca. 610–685) and Anania of Sanahin (fl. 11th c.).

The only monograph devoted to Anania was published in 1986 in Armenian by the late Hrach'ya T'amrazyan, director from 2007–2016 of the Matenadaran (the Mesrop Mashtots Research Institute of Ancient Manuscripts) in Yerevan.⁵ T'amrazyan's philological and literary research established the proper attribution of Anania's works, which he edited and published in 2011. He was the first to indicate the importance of this neglected figure and contextualize him within the Armenian literary tradition. Along with Anania's pupil Grigor and the latter's father Xosrov Anjewac'i, T'amrazyan presented a vivid picture of the literary, spiritual, and intellectual contributions of the writers of the "School of Narek" (Նարեկեան Դպրոցը) in a series of monographs he devoted to them.⁶

Anania has not yet been adequately situated within the political, social, intellectual, and religious developments of the wider Near East and Mediterranean region — the Byzantine (or East Roman) and Islamicate worlds — which he participated in and impacted through his several major works that responded to these developments. The goal of this dissertation is to offer a rich contextualization of Anania's works in relation to these wider issues as well as to recover the extent of his impact on several of the primary regional developments from the mid-ninth to mid-eleventh century. In so doing, this study offers a novel perspective on the multifaceted and interconnected worlds of the period's various and competing ethnoreligious communities, thereby contributing to the wider scholarly conversation on this period and region. By looking out at the world from the vantage point of the abbot of Narek, this dissertation aims to offer fresh insights to scholars interested in this pivotal period of Mediterranean and Near Eastern history.

⁴ They may be found, along with introductions by the editor, Hrach'ya T'amrazyan, in MH 10:309–657.

⁵ T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats'i.

⁶ T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats'i; idem, Narekyan dprots'ë; idem, Grigor Narekats'in ev norplatonakanut'yunë; idem, Grigor Narekats'in ev Narekyan dprots'ë.

LITERATURE REVIEW

The Publication of Anania's Writings

As mentioned above, it was in 2011 that the extant literary oeuvre of Anania of Narek was properly attributed to him and published. Until that time, only scattered individual works of his had been published, often incorrectly attributed to a different figure of the same name.

The first publication of one of Anania's works was in the eighteenth century, when his Encomium on the Holy Universal Church [Ներբողեան ասացեալ ի սուրբն կաթողիկէ եկեղեցի] was published in an anthology of religious texts.⁷ In this collection, it was not specified to which Anania the Encomium belonged. In subsequent centuries, scholars vacillated between attributing it to Narekac'i or Sanahnec'i.⁸ Two of his "instructions (xrath ')" were published in the 1836 four-volume Venice Mkhitarist publication of works attributed to Ephrem the Syrian, the instruction "On Humility (Խրատ վասն խոնարհութեան)" and "On Attention to Thoughts (Յաղագս խորհրդոց զգուշութեան)," without any discussion of the question of authorship.⁹ In the mid-nineteenth century, the Encomium was again published, this time correctly attributed to Narekac'i and issued in serial form in the philological and literary monthly Chrak'agh (Ճոսփաղ), a periodical that was in publication for less than five years (1858–62) in connection with the Lazarev Institute of Oriental Languages (Լազարեան ճեմարան) in Moscow.¹⁰ The end of the century saw the publication of two more works by Anania. In 1892, his “Letter of Confession (Գիր խոստովանութեան)” was published by Galust Tēr-Mkrtch‘ean (writing under the pen name Miaban [‘Monk’]) in Ararat, a monthly periodical under the auspices of the Mother See of the Armenian Church in Vałaršapat (Ējmiacin / Ējmiatsin).¹¹ The “Letter of Confession” was accompanied by a brief introduction on the significance of the T‘ondrakian heresy both within the Armenian realm and in relation to the broader history of Christian heretical movements. Tēr-Mkrtch‘ean, however, supposed the “Letter of Confession” was Anania’s lost work Refutation of the T‘ondrakians, and thereby introduced further confusion. In 1898–99, Anania’s “On Compunction and Tears [Յաղագս զղջման եւ արտասուաց]” was published serially in the Constantinopolitan bi-monthly literary journal Patker (Պատկեր).¹² In the accompanying introduction, Grigor Ashĕgean discussed the question of authorship and presented his view that the work should be ascribed to Anania of Narek and that “Gregory the Monk” (Գրիգոր միայնակեաց), who requested the work and to whom it is addressed, was none other than Anania’s famous pupil, Grigor of Narek.¹³ A fragment of Anania’s Refutation was discovered in a fourteenth-century manuscript of the works of Yovhannēs Erznkac‘i (M 2173) and published in Ararat in 1914.¹⁴ This is the only surviving fragment of this work that is otherwise no longer extant. For an Explanation of Numbers [Սակս բացայայտութեան թուոց]

⁷ Girk' or koch'i zhoghovatsu (Constantinople, 1747), 441–83. A second, and slightly modified edition of this volume, appeared at the end of the century: Girk' koch'ets'eal zhoghovatsu, Constantinople (1793), 403–42.

⁸ See the discussion below.

⁹ Srboyn Ep'remi matenagrut'iwnc' (Venice, 1836), 4:215–223.

¹⁰ Ayuazean and Msereants‘, “Anania Narekats‘i: Nerboghean.”

¹¹ Tēr-Mkrtch‘ean (Miaban), “Anania Narekats‘i 10-rd dar.”

¹² Ashĕgean, “Anania Narekats‘i.”

¹³ Ashĕgean, “Anania Narekats‘i,” 177. The other figures considered by Ashĕgean were Anania Anec‘i, Anania Širakac‘i, Anania Sanahnec‘i, Anania T‘argmanič‘, and Catholicos Anania Mokac‘i.

¹⁴ Garegin Yovsep‘ean, “Hayagitakan ayl ew aylk‘.”

was published in a collection of Anania Širakac‘i’s works in 1944, and attributed to the latter figure, by Ashot Abrahamyan.¹⁵

Publication of Anania’s literary oeuvre did not commence again until the turn of the millenium. In 2000, the Encomium was again published, this time attributed to Anania Sanahnec‘i in a collection of texts devoted to that author.¹⁶ In this same collection, The Root of Faith was published in the form it was transmitted via Sanahnec‘i’s later compilation Refutation of the Dyophysites (Հակաճառուութիւն ընդդէմ երկաբնակաց), but without acknowledgment that the latter text is essentially Narekac‘i’s Root of Faith with some minor editorial adjustments and additions.¹⁷ In 2010, a diplomatic edition along with a brief introduction and translation into Eastern Armenian of “On Humility” was published in the Mkhit‘arist periodical Handēs Amsōreay.¹⁸ Finally, in 2011, thanks to the aforementioned T‘amrazyan, the complete extant works of Anania Narekats‘i were published in the tenth volume of the Armenian Classical Authors series (Մատենագիրք Հայոց [hereafter MH]), with introductions dealing primarily with questions pertaining to authorship and attribution.¹⁹ Thanks to this publication, Anania’s complete extant works have now been made available. His works are outlined below with the corresponding page numbers in MH 10, along with a few additional details pertaining to their date of composition:²⁰

¹⁵ Abrahamyan, Anania Shirakats‘u matenagrut‘yunǰ, 237–50.

¹⁶ K‘yoseyan, H. H., Anania Sanahnets‘i, 117–56.

¹⁷ K‘yoseyan, H. H., Anania Sanahnets‘i, 192–337.

¹⁸ Iwzbashean, Ashkhēn, “Ananiayi vardapeti khrat.”

¹⁹ MH 10:309–657. The series is a collaborative project between the Armenian Catholicate of Cilicia (Antelias, Lebanon) and the Matenadaran Mashtots Institute of Ancient Manuscripts (Yerevan, Armenia), funded by the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation (Lisbon, Portugal) that aims to publish the complete works of native Armenian authors from the fifth to eighteenth centuries. It currently comprises twenty-one large volumes and has reached the twelfth century. See the series homepage on the website of the Matenadaran: <https://matenadaran.am/>.

²⁰ It bears mentioning that in various writings of his on Anania, T‘amrazyan has argued that Anania composed a History of Armenia (Պատմութիւն Հայոց). See T‘amrazyan, Anania Narekats‘i, 177–191; idem, Grigor Narekats‘i in

1. Book of Instruction (Խրատագիրք), MH 10:328–427.

The Book of Instruction consists of nine texts, of which the first six form a core collection that was commissioned by Bishop Xaç'ik, future Catholicos Xaç'ik I Aršaruni. The seventh is a lengthy text in the same ascetic, didactic genre (xrat), but was written at the request of one “Grigor the Monk” (Գրիգոր միայնակեաց), who some have supposed to be Grigor of Narek. The eighth systematizes some of the earlier works — along with additional material — into an ethics based on the Scriptures (especially the Gospels). The ninth recapitulates the previous material, but reworks it into the ‘chapters’ (kephalaia, capita) genre known from Byzantine ascetic literature, likely in order to facilitate its memorization.²¹ Because of their relation to the original six instructions, the latter three have been added to the Book of Instruction and are treated in the MH edition as a single book. This is useful so long as one realizes that all nine probably never circulated as a single collection in the premodern period, whether in Anania’s lifetime or afterwards.²² The instructions have a terminus ante quem of 972 (the date at which Bishop Xaç'ik was elected catholicos).²³ The nine individual texts are the following:

- i. “To Priests” (Խրատ քահանայից). MH 10:328–336.
- ii. “On Patience and Peace” (Խրատ վասն համբերութեան եւ խաղաղութեան). MH 10:337–341.
- iii. “On Humility” (Խրատ վասն խոնարհութեան). MH 10:342–46.
- iv. “Counsel on Prayer” (Բանք աղաւթից). MH 10:348–355.

ev narekyan dprots'ē, 1:30–40, 2:131–32, 145. This comes from what is in my view a mistaken reading of one passage of Uxtanēs’ dedicatory letter to Anania, where the former says:

Արդ քանզի լուեալ էր մեր յաղագս պատմութեան քո՝ սակաւ հատուածով առնել յսկզբան թագաւորացն հայոց մինչեւ ի մեզ, եւ գքո բանիբուն Պուեաիկոս դաստաշարժիղ վարժս ի ստադդիս ասպարէզ առ քո խաղաղութիւն, եւ գրնթացս լեզուիդ՝ որ քնար է Հոգւոյն, եւ որպէս կամի շարժէ գղա. եւ գուրախարար գիր պատմութեան Հայոց փոքր հատուածաւք՝ որպէս վերագոյն ասացաք, գոր արարեալ առ ի մխիթարութիւն ընթերցաւոց՝ եւ ի լուսաւորութիւն լսաւոց՝ եւ ի պայծառութիւն սրբոյ եկեղեցւոյ յիշատակել զայս եւս պատմութիւն, հայցէի փորք ի շատէ գրով իմով՝ որ բերաւ առ քեզ սակաւ ինչ յայտարարութեամբ ի ձեռն Փրիլպպոսի քահանայի՝ որպէս ի սկզբան ճառիս ասացաք. վասն զի եւ այսմ եւս ակն ոչ ունէի՝ եթէ ինձ հաւատալոց է ի քէն վիճակ պատմութեան: Uxtanēs of Sebasteia, History of Armenia 1, MH 15:453–54.58. T’amrazyan interpreted the պատմութեան քո (“your history”) in the first quoted line as “the history (written by) you” instead of “the history (commissioned) by you” or “the history you (wanted written),” i.e., Uxtanēs’ own History. Earlier in the letter, Uxtanēs notes that Anania had commissioned him with the task of writing the three-part History, the contents and outline of which they had planned and discussed together in multiple epistolary exchanges, as well as during a meeting in person at Argina. It is clear from Uxtanēs’ description that Anania was the mastermind behind the compositional plan and outline of the History, and for this reason Uxtanēs refers to it as Anania’s own, and himself as his master’s mouthpiece, playing the role of Aaron to Anania’s Moses (MH 15:447.4). T’amrazyan’s claim, based on Uxtanēs’ (at times, self-effacing) rhetoric, that Anania had himself written a History upon which Uxtanēs then based his own seems to me a misinterpretation of the information provided in Uxtanēs’ preface. For the full text of this prefatory letter, see Uxtanēs, History of Armenia 1, MH:15:446–55.1–74, tr. Arzoumanian, 11–20.

²¹ See Géhin, “Les collections de kephalaia monastiques;” Kalvesmaki, “Evagrius in the Byzantine Genre of Chapters.”

²² I am currently making an annotated translation and study of these texts and will treat these issues, as well as the manuscript tradition and other related issues, in more detail as part of that study.

²³ T’amrazyan, Grigor Narekats’ in ev Narekyan dprots’ē, 2:132–34, 144. It is possible that the latter three were written sometime after this date.

- v. “On this Transitory World” (Վասն անցաւոր աշխարհիս). MH 10:348–355.
 - vi. “On Attention to Thoughts” (Յաղագս խորհրդոց զգուշութեան). MH 10:356–359.
 - vii. “On Compunction and Tears” (Յաղագս զղման եւ արտասուաց). MH 10:360–395.
 - viii. “Evangelical, Apostolic, and Prophetic Speech and Instructions Which Lead Us to Eternal Life and Do Not Lead Us Astray to the Right or to the Left” (Խաւսք եւ խրատք աւետարանական, առաքելական եւ մարգարէական, որ տանին զմեզ ի կեանսն յաւիտենական եւ ոչ տան խտորել յաջ կամ յահեակ). MH 10:396–420.
 - ix. “Recapitulated and Condensed Sentences on the Things Said to You Before” (Գլխաւորեալ եւ համառաւտ բանք վասն յառաջ ասացելոցդ). MH 10:421–427.
2. Refutation of the T’ondrakians (Հակահառուօթիւն ընդդէմ Թ’ոնդրակեցւոց), MH 10:436–38 (fragment).
 The Refutation of the T’ondrakians was commissioned by Catholicos Anania Mokac’i and thus has a terminus ante quem of ca. 963–966 (the date of Catholicos Anania’s death).²⁴ Unfortunately, it is no longer extant. Only a small fragment survives in a fourteenth-century manuscript of the works of Yovhannēs Erznkac’i (ca. 1240–1293), who had himself extracted the fragment from Anania’s Refutation.²⁵
 The title in the manuscript is: “Summary Discourse of the Same Yovhannēs Erznkac’i Extracted from the Book Against the T’ondrakites by Vardapet Anania (Նորին Յովհաննիսի վարդապետի Եզնկայեցո[ւ] բան համառաւտ քաղեալ յԱնանիայի վարդապետին գրոցն, որ ընդդէմ Թ’ոնտրակեցոցն).”
3. For an Explanation of Numbers (Սակս բացայայտութեան թուոց), MH 10:440–455.
For an Explanation of Numbers explains number symbolism and issues from the monastic academic environment. It was likely employed didactically by Anania in his teaching role at Narek.²⁶
4. Root of Faith (Հաւատարմարտ), MH 10:480–598.²⁷
 The Root of Faith was commissioned by Catholicos Xaç’ik and has a terminus ante quem of 980 or 987.²⁸ Uxtanēs, in his dedicatory letter to Anania that precedes his History of Armenia, notes that Anania handed over the work in person to Catholicos Xaç’ik at the catholicosal residence at Argina, a meeting which took place in either 980 or 987 and at ²⁴ T’amrazyan, Grigor Narekats’ in ev Narekyan dprots’ ē, 2:144.

²⁵ M 2173, ff. 255r–257r.

²⁶ T’amrazyan, Grigor Narekats’ in ev Narekyan dprots’ ē, 2:145. I have not made much use of this text for the purposes of the present study, but I plan to study and perhaps translate it in the future.

²⁷ The MH edition includes a lengthy subtitle, under which the Root of Faith is known in the manuscript tradition: “Explanation of the dispute with the dyophysites, who under the guise of truth improperly profess duality when introducing the one nature, who is God the Word, the God-man Jesus Christ (Լուծումն մաքառման երկաբնակացն, որք ի կարծիս ճշմարտութեան անյարմար դաւանեն երկակս ի մինն մուծանել բնութիւն, որ է Աստուած Բանն, Աստուած մարդն Յիսուս Քրիստոս).” See, for example, M 2174, 185r; M 568, 2r.

²⁸ T’amrazyan, Grigor Narekats’ in ev Narekyan dprots’ ē, 2:145.

which Uxtanēs was also present.²⁹ Unfortunately, the Root of Faith does not survive in its original form, but thanks to the investigations of T‘amrazyan, the majority of the work has been recovered. Based on a careful study of the manuscript tradition, T‘amrazyan was able to extract the portions belonging to Narekac‘i’s original composition from Sanahnec‘i’s Refutation of the Dyophysites (Հակահառուքիւն ընդդէմ երկաբնակաց), and to publish those portions, which comprise the bulk of the work, in MH 10.³⁰

5. Encomium on the Holy Universal Church (Ներբողեան ասացեալ ի սուրբն կաթողիկէ եկեղեցի), MH 10:619–646.
Subtitle: “Which is in New City, Which Now is Called Valaršapat, Where the Miraculous Vision was Revealed to the Grand First Combatant S. Grigor the Illuminator” (Որ է ի Նոր Քաղաք, որ այժմ կոչի Վաղարշապատ, յորում տեղւոջ ցուցաւ հրաշալի տեսիլն մեծի նահատակի սրբոյն Գրիգորի Լուսաւորչի).
T‘amrazyan argues that the Encomium has a terminus ante quem of 977 (the date of the writing of Grigor of Narek’s Commentary on the Song of Songs, which, according to T‘amrazyan, was influenced by the Encomium).³¹
6. “Letter of Confession” (Գիր խոստովանութեան), MH 10:649–57.
Subtitle: “Concerning the false opinions about him” (Յաղաքս սուտ կարծեացն որ վասն նորա).
The Letter of Confession was written in Anania’s later life, and most likely addressed to Catholicos Xaç‘ik, in order to defend himself against accusations some had made that he was a “T‘ondrakec‘i.”³²

Scholarship on Anania’s Life and Literary Works

There has been little research conducted on the life and works of Anania Narekac‘i. He was covered in a cursory manner in several of the standard histories and surveys of Armenian ²⁹ For a discussion of the details surrounding this meeting and the date in question, see T‘amrazyan, Anania Narekats‘i, 39–43; Greenwood, Universal History, 7.

³⁰ For the discussion of the complicated relationship between these two works, see T‘amrazyan, “Anania Narekats‘u ‘Hawatarmat’ dawanabanakan erkĕ,” in MH 10:456–479.

³¹ T‘amrazyan, Grigor Narekats‘in ev Narekyan dprots‘ĕ, 2:145; idem, “Anania Narekats‘u ‘Nerboghean asats‘eal i surbn kat‘ughikĕ ekeghets‘i’ erkĕ,” in MH 10:599–618.

³² T‘amrazyan, Grigor Narekats‘in ev Narekyan dprots‘ĕ, 2:144–145. I will explore this issue in the fourth chapter.

literature³³ and history.³⁴ Such works, inspired by the testimonia of his students and other subsequent writers who heaped praise upon him, particularly Uxtanēs and Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, generally recognized him as a renowned theological doctor and teacher (վարդապետ), great philosopher (փիլիսոփայ մեծ), learned one (գիտուն), and rhetorician (հռետոր), with little analysis apart from stating his importance as founder of the monastery of Narek and the influence he had on the lives and works of subsequent Armenian figures, particularly Grigor of Narek and Uxtanēs. Many also noted Anania’s role in the T‘ondrakian controversy and Chalcedonian conflicts of the era, since he composed influential works against both of these groups that were cited and praised by later writers, such as Grigor of Narek, Grigor Magistros (ca. 990–1059), and Nersēs Šnorhali (ca. 1102 – 1173). However, since the majority of Anania’s works had not yet been published, while others were lost or incorrectly attributed, the coverage in such surveys could never have been anything but shallow, incomplete, and misleading.

Some particular attention has been paid to the importance of Anania Narekac‘i’s lost Refutation by scholars who have studied the T‘ondrakian controversy or Paulician heresy, in particular its influence upon Grigor of Narek’s later work about the T‘ondrakians.³⁵ It has long been recognized that Grigor’s “Letter” provides an outline sketch of the contents of Anania’s lost ³³ Representative examples include: Somal, Quadro della storia letteraria, 60–61; Neumann, Versuch einer Geschichte, 127–28; Durean, Patmut‘iwn hay matenagrut‘ean, 40–41 (first edition), 168–70 (second edition); Zarphanalean, Haykakan hin dprut‘ean, 515–16 (first edition), 532–34 (second edition); Zaminean, Hay grakanut‘ean patmut‘iwn, 145; Abeghyan, Hayots‘ hin grakanut‘yan patmut‘yun, 1:517–18, 520; Anasyan, Haykakan matenagitut‘yun 1:726–30; Inglisian, “Die Armenische Literatur,” 182–83, 185–86, 189; Pogharean, Hay groghner, 150–53; K‘iparean, Patmut‘iwn hay hin grakanut‘ean, 312, 328–29, 335, 366.

³⁴ Representative examples include: Ch‘amch‘ean, Patmut‘iwn Hayots‘, 2:824; M. Murateants‘, Patmut‘iwn Hayastaneayts‘ arak‘elakan, 400–01; Alishan, Hayapatum: patmich‘k‘ew patmut‘iwnk‘ hayots‘, 209–11; Örmanean, Azgapatum, vol. 1, §761, §791, §814; Arpee, A History of Armenian Christianity, 98, 110, 138–39; Grousset, Histoire de l’Arménie, 468–70.

³⁵ Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery.”

treatise.³⁶ Similarly, although somewhat less frequently, scholars considering Christological and ecclesiastical conflicts between the Byzantine and Armenian churches in the late tenth century have noted the role of Anania and his Root of Faith.³⁷ Others have considered Anania's role as founder and abbot of the monastery of Narek and his direction of its educational, liturgical, and musical programs, as well as his literary, spiritual, and theological influence upon Grigor of Narek.³⁸

T'amrazyan's contribution to our knowledge of Anania and his literary oeuvre deserves to be singled out from other research.³⁹ As mentioned above, it is thanks primarily to his philological, lexical, and thematic investigations that the correct attribution of Anania's works has been established.⁴⁰ He then compiled, edited, and published (in 2011) Anania's extant literary oeuvre.⁴¹ He wrote the only biography, gathering together the relevant testimonia from medieval Armenian writers, and ascertaining what details can be established about Anania's early life before he became founder of Narek monastery.⁴² He provided some of the only lengthy

³⁶ See Murats'an, "T'ontrakets'ineri aghandë;" Tēr-Mkrtch'ean, Die Paulikianer, 83–84; Sargisean, Usumnasirut'ivn Manik'ēa-Pawlikean, 5–8, 108 n. 2, 117 n. 1; Conybeare, Key of Truth, lxii, 126 n. 4, 130 n. 1; Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, 96; Ter-Minasyan, Mijnadaryan aghandneri tsagman, 150–53; Nersessian, Tondrakian Movement, 38, 55–56; Mahé, "L'église arménienne," 518–20; idem, "Le rôle et la fonction du Catholicos," 91; Mardirossian, "Lettre à la splendide," 100–02, 105; Krikorian, "The Letter of St. Gregory," 169–70; Dadoyan, Armenians in the Medieval Islamic World, 1:119, 136, 2:200–01; Terian, "Gregory of Narek," 285–86.

³⁷ See Tēr-Mkrtch'ean, Knik' Hawatoy, cviii–cx; Mécérian, "Préface" in Grégoire de Narek, Le livre de prières, 18–24; Cowe, "Impact of Time and Place," 88–90; Mahé, "Confession religieuse et identité nationale," 66 n. 19; Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 56–59; Augé, Églises en dialogue, 255–56 n. 33; Nakada, "Uxtanēs of Sebasteia," 177.

³⁸ T'ahmizyan, "Anania Narekats'u;" Cowe, "Impact of Time and Place;" Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 39–69; La Porta, "Monasticism and the Construction," 336, 339; Terian, "Gregory of Narek," 282–86; Papazian, Doctor of Mercy, 69–80.

³⁹ For summary estimations of the contribution of T'amrazyan to Narekian studies or the "School of Narek" (i.e., the writers Xosrov Anjewac'i, Anania of Narek, and Grigor of Narek), see Mahé, "Hrach'ya T'amrazyanë," 20–29; Muradyan, "Hrach'ya T'amrazyani narekats'iagitakan," 103–107. An obituary and curriculum vitae of T'amrazyan may be found in Banber Matenadarani 23: Gasparyan, "Hrach'ya T'amrazyani hishatakin," 6–8; T'amrazyan, "Hrach'ya T'amrazyani kensamatenagitut'yunčë," 9–19.

⁴⁰ See T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats'i; idem, Grigor Narekats'in ev narekyan dprots'ë, 1:29–215.

⁴¹ See MH 10:309–657.

⁴² T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats'i, 14–53; idem, Grigor Narekats'in ev narekyan dprots'ë, 2:114–49.

literary analyses of Anania's individual works, situating them in the Armenian literary tradition and citing relevant sources and influences upon Anania's thought.⁴³ He also problematized the view that Grigor of Narek was the first poet in the Armenian literary tradition⁴⁴ by recovering Anania's own rhythmic works and then revealing their influence upon Grigor and via Grigor to later authors of poetic works in the Armenian tradition such as Grigor Tlay (ca. 1133 – 1193) and Nersēs Šnorhali.⁴⁵

Building on T'amrazyan's 1986 monograph and the publication of Anania's extant corpus in 2011, some subsequent studies have offered insightful analysis of Anania's life and works, focusing especially on his ascetic and ethical teaching. Annie and Jean-Pierre Mahé devoted a lengthy portion of their introduction to the translation of Grigor of Narek's Book of Lamentation to examining various aspects of Anania's thought and wider impact, including the educational, liturgical, and musical program he established at Narek, the school curriculum, his involvement in the T'ondrakian controversy and Chalcedonian confessional strife, his approach to asceticism, and his poetics.⁴⁶ In my estimation, it is the best introduction to Anania available in a western language. Levon Petrosyan (Petrossian) offered some brief yet insightful comments on Anania's ethics, ascetics, and epistemology.⁴⁷ Michael Papazian likewise offered a helpful summary of Anania's teaching on spiritual practices and his embroilment in the heretical and doctrinal disputes of the day.⁴⁸ Peter Cowe's recent translation of Anania's "On this Transitory World" offers an original approach that reads this work in light of the regional economic boom

⁴³ See T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats'i; idem, Grigor Narekats'in ev narekyan dprots'ē, 2:151–443.

⁴⁴ Abeghyan, for example, in his history of Armenian literature, writes, "Grigor Narekac'i is our first great poet (Գրիգոր Նարեկացին մեր առաջին մեծ բանաստեղծն է." See Abeghyan, Hayots' hin grakanut'yan, 518.

⁴⁵ T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats'i, 244–328; idem, Grigor Narekats'in ev narekyan dprots'ē, 2:261–391.

⁴⁶ Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 39–69.

⁴⁷ Petrosyan [Petrossian], Levon. "Gregory of Narek and the Narekian Fathers," 28–29.

⁴⁸ Papazian, Doctor of Mercy, 69–80.

and building activity of the era, setting Anania's monastic ideals that were at home in the new cenobitic institutions of the era in contrast with those voiced by Gagik Arcruni's panegyrist (the Anonymous Continuator of T'ovma Arcruni's History of the House of the Arcrunik), who was preoccupied with the splendor of the great constructions of the era.⁴⁹ It also contains an excellent summary of various regional trends that shaped Anania's tenth-century context.

METHODOLOGY AND GOALS OF THE STUDY

My goal in this dissertation is not to rehash philological or text-critical questions on Anania's corpus. Thanks to T'amrazyan's investigations, we may consider the fundamental details relating to the life and works of Anania as established and many of the historical-critical problems solved. The publication of Anania's works has made possible new avenues of inquiry, allowing one to consider his works and activities in the context of the wider region. It is towards this end that the present study aims.

In my approach to this project, I have been inspired by Sebouh Aslanian's application of the methodology of global (or world) history to the study of the early modern Armenian past, which he approaches not through the "narrow optic of the nation(-state)" but through a regional or "global optic" that looks at exchanges across ethnic groups, religious boundaries, languages, political borders, and cultures.⁵⁰ Global history has been especially productive in scholarship on the early modern and modern periods, when the interconnectedness of peoples and societies across continents and oceans was put into high relief due to advances in technology and the consequent transoceanic mobility that those advances allowed.⁵¹ Growing out of the discourse of global history, Sanjay Subrahmanyam has introduced the term “connected histories” to refer to the histories of regions and peoples that are marked by interrelated developments, including the circulation of ideas across political boundaries, languages, and cultures.⁵² Such approaches are now being widely employed in the medieval period as well.⁵³

⁴⁹ Cowe, "Renewal of the Debate."

⁵⁰ Aslanian, "From 'Autonomous' to 'Interactive' Histories," 81–125, at 82. Sebouh Aslanian has employed this methodology in most of his studies. See especially Aslanian, "The Marble of Armenian History."

A regional approach that takes a wider purview than any single ethnolinguistic or religious tradition is especially appropriate for the Eastern Mediterranean, Near East, and Caucasus regions, which have been a crossroads and meeting point of different cultures throughout history. There have been many exemplary approaches to this region in the first millenium that make use of sources across confessional and linguistic boundaries. Garth Fowden’s contributions to intellectual history and exegetical traditions in the region’s ethnolinguistic and religious communities particularly stand out.⁵⁴ Another example is Thomas Sizgorich’s examination of violence and militancy in late antique Christian Grecophone and early Islamic Arabophone writers from the fifth to eighth centuries. Sizgorich refers to a “semiotic koinē” in late antiquity that was common to Christians and Muslims, who shared similar stories, images, symbols, and values and often lived side-by-side with one another.⁵⁵ Jack Tannous’ recent book reimagines the transformations from the late antique to early Islamic ⁵¹ The following studies are a helpful starting point for an introduction to this field, especially as it pertains to the early modern period: Bentley, “Introduction: The Task of World History;” Subrahmanyam, “Global Intellectual History.” For a book-length introduction, one may consult Conrad, What is Global History?

⁵² Subrahmanyam, “Connected Histories.”

⁵³ Hermans, Companion to the Global Early Middle Ages; Holmes and Standen, Global Middle Ages. There is now an Encyclopedia of the Global Middle Ages (EGMA) and various research groups and journals that are fostering this approach. This approach is now being brought specifically to medieval Armenian studies in the current project Armenia Entangled: Connectivity and Cultural Encounters in Medieval Eurasia 9th–14th Centuries (ArmEN), led by Zaroui Pogossian. <https://www.armen.unifi.it/>

⁵⁴ Fowden, Before and After Muhammad; idem, Abraham or Aristotle?; idem, Qusayr ‘Amra; idem, Empire to Commonwealth; idem, Egyptian Hermes.

⁵⁵ Sizgorich, Violence and Belief in Late Antiquity, 1–20, 272–82 at 276–78.

period through the eyes of “simple believers,” as he brings together Greek, Syriac, and Arabic sources to narrate the transformations that occurred in this region in the second half of the first millennium. In so doing, he refers to the need for “transconfessional histories” of the medieval Middle East in order to tell a more holistic story of the region that bridges the confessional and ethnolinguistic divides separating its communities.⁵⁶

These global, hemispheric, and regional “optics” have inspired my own approach to this project as I seek to situate Anania in a wider context that takes account of developments across the region and considers sources in several different languages. Oscillating between the “macro” and the “micro” has been a particularly challenging aspect of this project, and at this stage I have not yet been able to incorporate as much comparative material as I had originally planned. Nevertheless, in addition to the specific conclusions drawn and insights offered in this study, I hope that this project also demonstrates the possibilities that Armenian sources in general offer to those engaged in integrative historical study of the region and its peoples. It is my hope that through this recovery of Anania’s works and legacy, we might gain both a fuller picture of the historical landscape and a unique vantage point from which to view it, that will be of interest to all those engaged in the fascinating history of this region and its peoples.

ORDER OF CHAPTERS

Chapter One sets the scene of the larger political landscape in which Vaspurakan and the other local Armenian kingdoms of the mid-ninth to mid-eleventh centuries formed an integral part, introducing several important trends that are essential to understanding the era in which ⁵⁶ Tannous, Making of the Medieval Middle East.

Anania lived and the developments and crises he responded to in his literary works. First, I situate the Armenian kingdoms in their regional context as part of a larger movement of smaller semi-autonomous polities emerging on the periphery of the ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate beginning in the ninth century. I also discuss the internal political structures of contemporary Armenia, including the power relations between Armenian hereditary dynasts, the local Arab emirates, the regional caliphal governor (ostikan), the caliphal capital, and the Byzantine Empire. The second part of the chapter turns to a discussion of Armenia vis-à-vis international relations between the ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate and the Byzantine Empire. Over the course of the tenth and into the first half of the eleventh century, the Byzantine Empire expanded into Armenia, eventually absorbing the bulk of Armenian territory into its state, which it held briefly until the arrival of the Seljuks. These shifting political borders led to a number of significant demographic and social changes, including population movements and populist revolts. It also led to conflicts in the ecclesiastical realm, as the Armenian church fought to preserve its integrity from the assimilationist agenda of the Byzantine Church and Empire. These developments are taken up in more detail in subsequent chapters, since they constitute the crises to which Anania responded with his pen.

The second chapter discusses Armenia’s integration into the larger caliphal economy and the ways in which the Armenian dynasts profited from regional economic boom and Armīniya’s facilitation of international, overland trade. This sets the stage for a discussion of the founding of Narek monastery within the larger history of the patronage of local rulers in this period, including their numerous building projects of both a civic and religious nature. The foundation of Narek was part of a regional proliferation of large, cenobitic monastic establishments from the second half of the ninth to the eleventh century. The chapter reviews the role of building projects in the political ambitions and aspirations of the noble dynasts who sponsored them, focusing especially on the Arcruni family in Vaspurakan. It also reviews the traditional dating for the founding of Narek and other monasteries in the period, contextualizes the foundation of Narek within the overall political ambitions of King Gagik Arcruni, and offers an explanation for why Anania and his companion vardapet Petros were chosen to lead the monastery's direction. It concludes with a discussion of what was new about the cenobitic monasteries founded in this period.

Chapter Three picks up where the previous chapter left off, mentioning the various roles that the cenobitic institutions played in Armenian society. It narrows in on the internal intellectual and spiritual life at Narek and attempts a reconstruction of its educational system. Here, I make use of Anania's Book of Instruction and other sources to demonstrate how ascetic-mystical education at Narek was not limited to the intellectual realm but aimed at shaping the whole human person, conceived of as body, soul, and spirit. It also examines the way in which Anania's own texts were meant to shape the mind and worldview of young monks and aid them in their ascetic training. The chapter reveals the profound impact of Anania's system of ascetic-mystical and intellectual education established at Narek monastery not just on Grigor and his other pupils but on the subsequent Armenian intellectual tradition. As one of the first — if not the very first — of the major medieval monastic academies of the period, Narek became a model for the later monastic centers founded throughout the broader Armenian oikoumené, which remained the intellectual and cultural centers of Armenian life into the early modern period.

The fourth chapter focuses on the complicated issue of Anania's relationship with the T'ondrakians (T'ondrakec'ik). It offers an explanation for how he both could have written a treatise against the movement and been himself denounced as a "T'ondrakec'i" heretic. The chapter first explores how the larger political and economic changes that mark the period sparked internal unrest that shook the stability of Armenian social and religious order. Dynamism, changes, and crises are notable features of the tenth century. The chapter explores some of these, including populist revolts, clashes and controversies between the catholicos and bishops, clashes between the church of the establishment and local, fringe Christian communities such as the T'ondrakites, and clashes between the church hierarchy and ascetic, spiritualist leaders of monasteries like Anania. Through a careful reexamination of the sources and their contextualization within the larger developments of the period, I present a new perspective on the relationship between the T'ondrakites and ascetic, monastic figures such as Anania and their conflict with the official church hierarchy. I explain the development of the T'ondrakec'i label as a new heretical type and offer an interpretation as to how and why it was applied to multiple ascetic figures of the period.

The fifth chapter turns to conflicts between the Armenian, Syriac, and Byzantine churches, prompted by the Byzantine Empire's expansion and attempt to integrate its newly conquered regions politically and ecclesiastically into its state. It contextualizes the confessional tensions we hear of in the period as a result of the influx of Armenian and Syriac non-Chalcedonian immigrants into the Byzantine state's newly conquered territories. This soon led to confessional tensions and other ecclesiastical issues between the imperial church and the Syrian and Armenian churches over matters of Christology, Ecclesiology and the validity of sacraments, and episcopal jurisdiction. While the miaphysite Armenian Church sought to administer its flock in imperial territory, the Byzantine Church sought to integrate the non-Chalcedonian communities into its own structure by making them accept Chalcedonian theology. This chapter reconstructs the literary defense crafted by Anania and the leading vardapets of the period in response to attacks from polemical letters sent by Byzantine bishops in the newly conquered eastern portions of the empire, situating the perspective and activities of the vardapets alongside other Armenian responses to the political dynamism that defined the age.

CHAPTER 1

BACKGROUND TO ANANIA OF NAREK'S LIFE AND WORKS: AN OVERVIEW OF MAJOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENTS

All mankinde is of one Author, and is one volume; when one Man dies, one Chapter is not torne out of the booke, but translated into a better language; and every Chapter must be so translated...

No man is an Iland, intire of it selfe; every man is a peece of the Continent, a part of the maine.

— John Donne, “Devotions Upon Emergent Occasions, Meditation 17”

Anania was born near the beginning of the tenth century, at a time when the political scene in Armenia was characterized by the resurgence of local kingship within the overarching caliphal structure. This began with the Bagratuni kingdom in the late ninth century, which throughout the course of the tenth fragmented internally, both in the form of break-away kingdoms (the Arcruni and Siwni) and by itself dividing into smaller kingdoms. The monastery where Anania lived and wrote, Narekavank¹, located near the southern shores of Lake Van, was founded by one such Armenian king in this period, Gagik Arcruni (r. 908 – ca. 943/4), nearby the twin Arcruni capitals of Alt¹amar and Ostan. Anania was appointed the monastery's first abbot and was responsible for the regulation of its internal life. Unlike some medieval monks, who resolutely renounced involvement in secular affairs in order to pursue the internal life of the spirit, Anania emerges as a figure who was not only well aware of the world outside his monastery's walls, but who actively participated in it. Certain of Anania's books were written to address specific challenges facing the Armenian confessional community.

The ninth to eleventh centuries was a period of great change and upheaval in the political, social-demographic, and ecclesiastical realms. Without an understanding of these developments, it is not possible to properly understand Anania's works. Therefore, the survey in this chapter is meant to provide a rich contextual backdrop to a closer examination of Anania's works in relation to these developments. Furthermore, Anania's own voice and significant role has not been adequately integrated into the historiography of this period, and therefore one of the goals of this study is also to place his perspective in conversation with those of his contemporaries, in order to provide a more holistic view of the broader period (while also contextualizing Anania within it). This first chapter thus surveys the major regional developments manifest in the era in which Anania of Narek lived, in order to provide a contextual background to his life and works.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE MID-NINTH TO MID-ELEVENTH CENTURIES

By the time Anania was born, Greater Armenia had been administratively integrated into the caliphate for over two centuries. More recently, Armenia had been granted an increased measure of local autonomy with the establishment of the Bagratid kingdom in the late ninth century, which followed trends observable throughout the provinces of the caliphate. The second half of the ninth century was the beginning of a general period of disintegration and fragmentation of centralized political rule, with centrifugal tendencies discernible across the Caliphate. The assassination of Caliph al-Mutawakkil (r. 847 – 861) marked the dramatic turning point, ushering in a decade of crisis known as the anarchy of Sāmarrā' (861 – 870), after which the 'Abbāsīd caliphs no longer maintained the same level of control over the provinces that they had previously.¹ Beginning in the periphery of the caliphate, smaller dynastic polities emerged that exercised local autonomy, in most cases still recognizing the unique position and primacy of the caliph and maintaining formal and economic integration with the rest of the caliphate.² In line with this pattern, locally autonomous Armenian and Georgian (Iberian) kingdoms were formed, which, like the other polities emerging throughout the Caliphate, still remained under the caliph's suzerainty. The formation of the Bagratuni kingdom is also connected with the growing independence of the caliphal governor (Arm. ostikan; Ar. amīr) of the North, a position that had begun to be handed down dynastically in this period. By investing the Bagratunis of Armenia and then Iberia as local kings, the caliph was seeking to provide a counterbalance to the separatist tendencies of the ostikan, a 'divide and rule' strategy that was also of benefit to the local Armenian ruling élite. Whether foreseen at the time or not, from the perspective of the caliphal center, it was probably a welcome development when the ostikan and Armenian king went to war with one another not many years later, and then also when the Armenian kingdom itself fragmented into smaller and more easily manageable units in the tenth century.

¹ Bonner, "The waning of empire," 305–09; Kennedy, Prophet and the Age of the Caliphates, 169–73; Gordon, Breaking of a Thousand Swords, 80–104.

In this same period, the Byzantine Empire under the militaristic Macedonian dynasty (867–1056) took advantage of the weakened caliphal center and the pattern of disintegration across the Caliphate, in order to expand eastwards across Armenian territory and southwards into Syria and Mesopotamia. The emperors of the era soon harbored the goal of recovering the territory that the Eastern Roman Empire had held in its heyday in the days of Emperor Justinian I (527–565). Imperial propaganda likewise proclaimed that the Macedonian dynasty's founder, Basil I (867–886), was not only of Armenian ancestry but was of direct descent from the line of the Parthian Arsacids, the royal house that had ruled over Armenia until AD 428. His advent — and expansion across Armenia — was therefore heralded as fulfillment of the prediction of the fifth-century Catholicos Sahak’s vision recorded in the History of Łazar P’arpec’i that announced the future restoration of kingship in Armenia via a descendant of the Arsacid family.³ Despite this fictive Arsacid lineage, the family did have Armenian connections, as did several of the important generals and high-ranking military officers, such as John Kourkouas (Gurgen), who led the imperial expansion against the Arab armies in this period. This expansion began gradually with western and southern Armenian provinces in the tenth century and reached its apogee in the eleventh. By the mid-eleventh century, the empire had conquered, or been granted through wills from Armenian nobility, the bulk of Armenian territory, which it held for only a couple decades until it was lost again to the invading Seljuk armies. Let us now circle back to review some of these developments in more detail and explore the effect they had on those internal conditions of Armenia to which Anania responded with his pen.

² Provincial governors would symbolically indicate their loyalty to the caliph in two primary ways: first by having the caliph's name inscribed on coins struck in their provincial mints and secondly by invoking his name during the sermon delivered on the occasion of the Friday gathering for prayer. See Bonner, "The waning of empire," 316.

ARMENIA AMID CENTRIFUGAL POLITICAL TRENDS IN THE CALIPHATE

While explaining the disintegration of the caliphate, Michael Bonner has identified three types of polities that began to emerge across the Islamic world at this time. First, there were dynastic states that resulted from the operations of a military adventurer who seized control over a territory and then sought to legitimize his rule vis-à-vis the local population, the caliph, and other centers of power.⁴ The second type were those that formed in frontier areas and bore the characteristics of frontier societies, marked by the movement and mixing of peoples, including volunteer fighters, ascetics, and men of religious learning, who were also engaged in combat against non-Muslims in the borderlands.⁵ Iterations of this second type were present in the caliphal North, such as the Qaysid emirate of Minasjird (Manazkert) along the border with the Byzantine empire or later the Sharwān shāhs, who ruled in Caucasian Albania (Aḷuank‘) over Bāb al-Abwāb/Darband in the provinces of Sharwān and Layzān with their capital at Shamākhiyya in the far reaches of the caliphal North on the frontier with the northern Caucasus.⁶ The third type were those states that formed out of a combination of tribal group feeling and the propagation of a new religious message.⁷ These models are restricted to Muslim polities and none of them quite fit the situation of the Christian kingdoms of the Caucasus.

³ Greenwood, “Basil I,” 455–56. For the text of the vision and prophecy, see Łazar P’arpec’i, History of Armenia I.17, MH 2:2225–34.1–75 at 55; trans. Thomson, 64–72 at 69.

⁴ As an example of this type, he gives the Būyids. See Bonner, “The waning of empire,” 358.

It has long been observed that from Khurāsān in the East to the Caucasus in the North, most of the small kingdoms and states that emerged beginning in the second half of the ninth century shared in a general Iranian oikoumené or commonwealth.⁸ Vladimir Minorsky therefore dubbed this period from the second half of the ninth to the first half of the eleventh centuries the Iranian intermezzo, because of the number of discrete Iranian dynasties that ruled over this wide stretch of territory.⁹ Examples in the East include the Ṭāhirids (821 – 873) of Khurāsān with their

⁵ Examples are the Ṣaffārids and Sāmānids in the East and the Ḥamdānids in Northern Mesopotamia and Syria. See Bonner, “The waning of empire,” 358.

⁶ On the Qaysid emirate, see Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 109–111; Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 51–53. On the Sharwān shahs, see Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 7; Bowsorth, “Šervānšahs;” idem, New Islamic Dynasties, s.v. “The Sharwān Shāhs.”

⁷ The examples given are the Fāṭimids in North Africa and the Qarāmiṭa in Baḥrayn. See Bonner, “The waning of empire,” 358.

⁸ See the helpful map provided in Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 6. The centrifugal pattern had its beginnings much earlier in the non-Iranian, western portions of the Caliphate, notably in al-Andalus, which emerged independent from the ‘Abbāsids shortly after they took over in the 750s and then declared a restored Umayyad Caliphate in 929. Likewise, the province of Ifrīqiya was governed in a largely autonomous fashion by amīrs of the Aghlabid dynasty since 800. In the wake of the decade of anarchy, the same pattern prevailed in Egypt, first with the Ṭūlūnids (868 – 905) — who went on to control Syria as well — and then eventually with the Fāṭimids, who came to power in North Africa in 909 and then ruled Egypt as caliphs from 969 onwards. See Bonner, “The waning of empire,” 318–322, 331, 338–343.

⁹ See Minorsky, La Domination des Dailamites; idem, Studies in Caucasian History, 110–16.

capital at Nīshāpūr,¹⁰ the Ṣaffārids, whose rule was centered in Sīstān with their capital at Zaranj (Zarang) from 861 to 1003,¹¹ and the Sāmānids, who ruled Khurāsān with their capital in Bukhārā from 875 to 1005. Persianate Islamic dynasties in the North include the Sājids (889 – 929), governors (ostikans) in Azerbaijan (Ādharbayjān) and Armenia (Armīniya), who engaged in military conflict — about which more will be said below — with Armenian Bagratid and Arcruni kings.¹² Iranian Daylamī dynasties include the Musāfirids (also known as the Sallārids or Kangarids, ca. 916 – ca. 1090), who governed Ādharbayjān, Arrān, and portions of Armenia in the tenth and into the eleventh century¹³ and, most famously, the Būyids (932 – 1062), who took over control of the lands in Iraq and western Iran that formed the core territories of the ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate.¹⁴ Minor Kurdish dynasties that arose in various locales of the Islamic North also form a part of the broader Iranian resurgence in this period. These include the Kurdicized Rawwādids of Azerbaijan in the tenth and eleventh centuries, the Marwānids (983–1085) in Diyār Bakr, and the Shāddādids (ca. 951 – 1174) in Arrān and eastern Armenia.¹⁵

While Minorsky focused on Muslim polities of the period, recent work by Alison Vacca has extended the pattern to include the Armenian and Georgian Christian kingdoms of the North, since they also shared in the Iranian commonwealth broadly conceived.¹⁶ Viewed through the

¹⁰ Bonner, “The waning of empire,” 314–15; Bosworth, “The Ṭāhirids and Ṣaffārids,” 90; Daniel, “Taherids;” Bosworth, New Islamic Dynasties, s.v. “The Ṭāhirids and Muṣ’abids.”

¹¹ Bonner, “The waning of empire,” 315–18; Bosworth, “The Ṭāhirids and Ṣaffārids;” Bosworth, “Saffarids;” Bosworth, New Islamic Dynasties, s.v. “The Ṣaffārids.”

¹² Bosworth, New Islamic Dynasties, s.v. “The Sājids;” idem, “Sādījids;” Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 7.

¹³ Minorsky, “Musāfirids;” Bosworth, New Islamic Dynasties, s.v. “The Musāfirids or Sallārids;” Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 7.

¹⁴ Kennedy, “The late ‘Abbāsīd pattern,” 364; Bosworth, New Islamic Dynasties, s.v. “The Būyids or Buwayhids;” Cahen, “Buwayhids or Būyids.”

¹⁵ Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 7. Minorsky, Studies in Caucasian History, 115–16; Bosworth, “Rawwādids;” idem, New Islamic Dynasties, s.v. “The Rawwādids;” idem, New Islamic Dynasties, s.v. “The Marwānids;” Hillenbrand, “Marwānids;” Bosworth, New Islamic Dynasties, s.v. “The Shāddādids;” idem, “Shaddādids.”

¹⁶ See Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces.

prism of Islamic history, the term Iranian intermezzo was used by Minorsky and adopted by Vacca to distinguish this period from that of Arab rule that preceded it and the rise of the Seljuks that marked its end. However, taking a wider temporal purview, it can be seen as the return or reemergence of Iranian rule over that portion of the Near East — a return back to what had began already in the sixth century BC with the rise of the Achaemenid Empire and lasted up until to the fall of the Sasanian Empire in the seventh century AD. Thus, the period might more accurately be termed the Iranian resurgence or reemergence. One could argue, in fact, that this process was already underway with the ‘Abbāsīd overthrow of the Umayyads, since the former drew much of their support from the Iranian Khurāsāniyyah, made their capital in Baghdad not far from the old Sasanian capital of Ctesiphon, and populated their court with a significant proportion of Iranians, in contrast to the largely Arab court of the Umayyads in Damascus.¹⁷

The fragmentation of the ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate into smaller autonomous polities during what has been termed the Iranian intermezzo was a return to a typically Iranian form of governance that was marked by decentralization, as a result of the traditional Iranian social structure. Traditional Iranian, as also Armenian societal structure (which had become increasingly influenced by Parthian norms in antiquity), was fiercely local in its loyalties and identity, being comprised of agnatic family groups, i.e., communities of kinsmen that traced themselves through the paternal line to a common ancestor.¹⁸ Agnatic groups were the most important structure of the civic community, defining the economic and political systems, religious beliefs and practices, and social obligations of various locales and those who lived within them.¹⁹ During the Parthian and Sasanian periods, agnatic groups of nobility ruled over their territory in hereditary fashion, exercising largely autonomous rule in their domains, while acknowledging the primacy of the king or shah.

¹⁷ On some of these details, see Kennedy, Prophet and the Age of the Caliphates, 132–36.

¹⁸ Perikhanian, “Iranian Society and Law,” 642; Pourshariati, Decline and Fall, 27–28.

In the Armenian context, this is known as the naxarar social structure, and one recalls that many of the Armenian noble houses were themselves of Iranian, and more directly Parthian, stock.²⁰ In this system, territorial possessions were hereditary, as were offices of state, being passed down the paternal line within the great noble (naxarar) families, each of which led by its chief or senior member (called tēr, tanutēr, or nahapet).²¹ Such a social structure naturally resisted strong centralized rule.

It has long been acknowledged that Parthian rule was largely decentralized, and recent work by Parvaneh Pourshariati has further argued that despite attempts at centralization, Sasanian shahs ruled their empire through a decentralized dynastic system that she terms the “Sasanian-Parthian confederacy,” and not in the highly centralized fashion that had long been widely assumed to be the case by previous generations of scholars.²² This social structure in Armenia continued into Anania’s time, although during his lifetime it had already become significantly attenuated, with many of the lesser noble families having been destroyed or displaced, with their places taken both by Arab emirates, who settled in Armenia from the late eighth century onward (on which, see below) and by the expansion of three major Armenian naxarar families — namely, the Bagratuni, Siwni, and Arcruni — to fill the gaps left by the lesser ones.

¹⁹ Perikhanian, “Iranian Society and Law,” 641–43, Pourshariati, Decline and Fall, 27–29.

²⁰ Garsoïan, “Naxarar;” Adontz, Armenia in the Period of Justinian.

²¹ Garsoïan, “Naxarar.”

²² Pourshariati, Decline and Fall, 2.

Armenia Between the Conflicting Poles of Caliphal Integration and Separatism

The Iranian polities that ruled over their various territories in the caliphal North and East from the second half of the ninth to the eleventh century were generally not new actors on the scene, but rather many were led by — or claimed to be led by — the same noble, often Parthian, families that had been in those lands before the Arab conquests and continued to exhibit the centrifugal tendencies that they had previously exhibited during the Sasanian period. Indeed, the relationship of Armenian noble families with the caliphal center beginning in the seventh century and extending into this period can be understood as a dynamic process of reaction and counterreaction, as Armenian revolt and centrifugal tendencies clashed with the centralizing efforts of the caliphs, a relationship that shared much in common with the one they had with their previous suzerain, the Sasanian shah.²³ During this time, the Byzantine Empire also vied for control of Armenia and eventually made a significant expansion eastwards. The Byzantine expansion is another vital element of this political matrix that harkens back to the Roman-Sasanian wars of late antiquity in the late sixth and early seventh centuries, and, going even further back, the Roman-Parthian wars, beginning in the first century BC.²⁴

The caliphs attempted to integrate Armenia more closely into the caliphate both in response to Armenian centrifugal tendencies and perhaps also as a way of preemptively mitigating Byzantine ambitions to itself possess Armenia. It will therefore be helpful to refer back to some of the political power structures and dynamic relations at play between Armenia and the Roman and Sasanian Empires in late antiquity, as a way of understanding the fluid and complex situation of Armenia vis-à-vis the Caliphate and Byzantine Empire from the second half of the ninth to the first half of the eleventh century.

²³ This is also true in the Artaxiad period of the growth of Parthian power. Alison Vacca traces in great detail many of the continuities, real and perceived, between Sasanian and caliphal rule over Armenia. See Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces.

²⁴ On Armenia as a contested space in late antiquity between the Roman-Sasanian / Byzantine-Arab worlds, see Greenwood, “A Contested Jurisdiction;” idem, “Armenian Space.”

Periodic Arab raids into Armenia from Syria and Mesopotamia began in 640 and continued for the next decade and a half until terms were arranged in 653/54, when Theodore Āštuni, then prince of Armenia (išxan Hayoc), signed an agreement with the Arab governor of Syria, Mu‘āwiyah (who later became caliph, r. 661–680).²⁵ By the terms of the agreement, Armenia was recognized as an autonomous state that was subject to a moderate annual tribute and a contribution of troops to the Arab army, an arrangement that was the first of its kind in the caliphate.²⁶ One wonders whether conditions may have continued under this rather harmonious arrangement, had the Byzantine Empire relinquished its ambition to control Armenia. But the memory of control over significant portions of Armenia in the late sixth and early seventh century (before the coming of the Arabs) was fresh and its strategic and material advantages not soon forgotten. From 689–693, taking advantage of unstable conditions in the Umayyad Caliphate during the second fitna (680–692), the Byzantines temporarily gained the upper hand and enjoyed a very brief occupation of Armenia.²⁷ In response, Muḥammad b. Marwān, half-brother of caliph ‘Abd al-Malik (685–705), undertook a series of military campaigns into Armenia in order to regain the region and integrate it more fully into the caliphate, so that such an aberrant situation would not be repeated in the future.²⁸ Following his successes, a large administrative province in the South Caucasus, known as al-Armīniya, was created for this

²⁵ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 20; Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 105; Garsoïan, “Arab Invasions,” 120–21.

²⁶ Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 105; Garsoïan, “Arab Invasions,” 120–21.

²⁷ Martin-Hisard, “Domination arabe,” 219–22.

²⁸ Garsoïan, “Arab Invasions,” 125–26.

purpose. Armīniya consisted of Greater Armenia, Eastern Iberia (Kʿartʿli), and Caucasian Albania (Aḥuankʿ).²⁹ Some have suggested that this administrative structure was modeled on the previous Sasanian administrative unit of the Kʿust-i Kapkoh (the kustak of Caucasia), which was composed of a similar configuration.³⁰ A governor was appointed to administer the province, defend it from external invasion, and collect taxes. His seat was positioned at Duin/Dabīl, the capital of Armenia from the second half of the fifth century.³¹ In Armenian sources, this figure was generally called an ostikan (an Iranian word meaning ‘sure,’ ‘faithful,’ or ‘loyal’) and in Arab sources an amīr (‘military commander’ or ‘governor’).

The effort to more fully integrate Armenia into the caliphate as a result of Armenian separatist tendencies and contestation from Byzantium hearkens back to similar attempts by the Sasanian Empire, prompted by Roman attempts to control Armenia and the threat posed by Christianity as a unifying factor between Armenia and the Roman Empire.³² Rome’s contestation for control of Armenia gained pace in the late fourth century, and after a series of battles a treaty between the two empires was arranged by Emperor Theodosius I (r. 379–395) and Shah Shapur III (r. 383–388) in 387 known as the Peace of Ekeḫeacʿ (Gk., Akilisēnē). Under this agreement, around four fifths of Armenian territory remained under Sasanian jurisdiction, while about a fifth passed into Roman control.³³ Threatened by Roman ambitions in Armenia and fearful that the

²⁹ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 11. During certain periods, al-Armīniya was also united with Ādharbayjān (Atrpatakan) or with the Jazīra under a single governance. See Canard, Cahen, and Deny, “Armīniya.”

³⁰ Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 105; Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 11; Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 65–67.

³¹ Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 105; Canard, Cahen, and Deny, “Armīniya.” In the late ninth century, the ostikan ceased to reside solely at Duin, setting up another capital to the east in Partaw (Bardhaʿa) in Arrān (Albania), in which he resided when conditions were unfavorable at Duin. See Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 36; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 107.

³² On the Roman and Sasanian struggle for control over Armenia in late antiquity, see Greenwood, “A Contested Jurisdiction.”

³³ Garsoīan, “The Aršakuni Dynasty,” 92; Nersessian, “Armenia, partitions of.” The dividing border line ran north to south from the shore of the Black Sea coast east of Trebizond (modern Trabzon in Turkey), passing by the city of spread of Christianity in Persarmenia might undermine that region's fealty to the state, the Sasanian Empire advanced a policy that sought to draw the region more firmly into its own orbit. A concerted effort was thus made to undermine its distinctive institutions. The first casualty was the already weakened Parthian Aršakuni (Arsacid) dynasty — long sworn enemies of the Sasanian rulers since the latter's overthrow of the Parthian house ruling Iran in 224 — which fell in 428 with the joint cooperation of the centrifugal and locally autonomous Armenian naxarars who at this stage preferred the suzerainty of a distant liege lord in the figure of the Sasanian shah to the local Arsacid king ruling in Persarmenia itself.³⁴ Persarmenia then came under the direct rule of a marzpan (Pahlavi/Middle Persian, marzbān), a military and civil governor, appointed by the shah.³⁵ At times the office of marzbān was held by the patriarch (nahapet) of an Armenian naxarar house, but more commonly it was filled by an élite Persian military aristocrat appointed by the shah to be the representative of his power (like the later ostikan, his seat was at Duin).³⁶ There is thus a noticeable parallel between the ostikan in the caliphal period and the marzbān during the Sasanian period. In fact, Lewond, an Armenian historian active during the early period of Arab rule, continued using the term marzbān to designate the caliphal governor of Armīniya, signifying the perceived continuity between Sasanian and caliphal governance over Armenia in the eyes of the local populace.³⁷

Karin (Gk., Theodosiupolis [modern Erzerum]) in the north down to Mesopotamia west of Nisibis in the south. See Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 65, p. 85; Hewsens, Map 7, "The Partitions of Armenia, 387 and 591 A.D.," in Hovannisian, Armenian People, 1:97.

³⁴ Garsoïan, "The Aršakuni Dynasty," 93.

³⁵ As the etymology of the word indicates (marz, 'border, boundary, frontier' with suffix -bān, 'guardian, protector' from Old Iranian marza-panā), Sasanian marzbāns had the important military function of protecting and governing the border regions of the empire. See Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 117–18; Pourshariati, Decline and Fall of the Sasanian Empire, 503; Kramers, "Marzubān;" Gignoux, "L'Organisation administrative Sasanide," 4.

³⁶ On the period in general, see Garsoïan, "The Marzpanate."

³⁷ Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 114–24 at 116.

After the fall of the Aršakuni dynasty, Sasanian shahs then made an effort to undermine first the catholicate and then Christianity in Armenia. In the mid-fifth century, Shah Yazdgard II (r. 438–457) attempted to bring Armenia into conformity with the official Zurvanite Zoroastrianism of the empire.³⁸ This, in turn, sparked a series of Armenian revolts led by the prominent Mamikonean naxarar family, until Armenia was granted the right to religious self-determination in 484. The Mamikonean family, which consistently maintained a pro-Roman position, also took the Byzantine side in its wars with the Sasanian Empire in the late sixth and early seventh century. This general policy continued into the caliphal period, when the Mamikonean house took the leading role in a series of revolts against the caliphate in the eighth century (with devastating results for the Mamikoneans, who were largely decimated at this time), after the formation of Armīniya and caliphal attempts to integrate the North more fully into the caliphate.

Armenian Revolts of the Eighth Century and Changes to the Naxarar Social Structure

The Armenian revolts of the eighth century, and the caliphal suppressions of them, led to profound changes in the naxarar structure of Armenian society, in part as a result of retaliatory measures from the center. The eighth and ninth centuries witnessed the demise, disappearance, or destruction of lesser families as well as certain great families, like the Mamikonean, who had taken part in the revolts. Filling the resulting vacuum, three major families came to dominate Armenia during the ninth and tenth centuries, namely the Bagratuni, Siwni, and Arcruni, who greatly expanded their domains, incorporating those territories that had formerly belonged to lesser naxarar families. Arcruni expansion soon encompassed Vaspurakan in the south, and it is here that Anania was appointed abbot of Narek monastery, founded at the height of Arcrunid power in the second quarter of the tenth century.

³⁸ Garsoïan, “The Marzpanate,” 98–101.

One of the reasons that the Bagratids emerged in the ninth century as the dominant Armenian family of the era was that they generally took a neutral or pro-caliphal stance when certain naxarar families, generally led by the Mamikoneans, organized revolts against caliphal taxation or rule.³⁹ While the fortunes of the Bagratunis rose often through studied neutrality, by contrast successive scions of the Mamikonean and other naxarar houses were executed following caliphal suppression of the revolts. The insurrection with the most devastating consequences took place in 774–75, led by Mamikonean scions Artawazd and Mušel. It began with the execution of caliphal tax collectors and erupted into war.⁴⁰ The caliphal armies were victorious and executed the leading males of the Mamikonean house and those of many other houses that had joined with them. As a result, the male line of the Mamikonean and several other houses disappeared altogether.⁴¹ At this point, the caliphal center was at the height of its power vis-à-vis the Armenian naxarars and took advantage of its position to seek further political integration of Armīniya.

The Migration of Arab Tribes and the Establishment of Emirates

One of the significant actions taken by the center to strengthen its hold on the region in the aftermath of the eighth century revolts was the settling of Arab tribes in the North. This had a deep and long-lasting impact on the local social structure. As mentioned above, in this period prominent noble houses such as the Mamikoneans and Kamsarakans, as well as many lesser houses, were decimated and disappeared or abandoned their estates and migrated to the Byzantine empire, where they were generally settled along the Arab-Byzantine border and employed by the empire in its border wars with the caliphate.⁴² In addition to enabling the expansion of the Bagratuni, Arcruni, and Siwni naxarar houses, another fundamental change to the internal make-up of Armenian society was initiated: the settling of Arab colonists in Armenia to take up permanent residence there. The arrival of Arab emirates in Armenia profoundly altered the traditional and exclusive hereditary rule of Armenian naxarars over their domains. This deliberate disruption to the integrity of the native Armenian social structure strengthened the caliph's hold over the region. The Arab emirates that were established in the ninth and tenth centuries marked a watershed change to the centuries-old status quo of the naxarar social system, since the emirates were a foreign element permanently settled in Armenian territory.⁴³ This unprecedented development became more common in the following centuries.

³⁹ On these revolts, see Garsoïan, “Arab Invasions,” 125–32.

⁴⁰ Lewond, History, XL–XLI (34), MH 6:828–34, tr. Martin-Hisard, 160–72, tr. Arzoumanian, 129–38. See Garsoïan, “The Arab Invasions,” 131–32.

⁴¹ Garsoïan, “The Arab Invasions,” 133.

The Arab migrations into Armenia began in earnest during the reign of Hārūn al-Rashīd (786–809).⁴⁴ From the perspective of the caliphate, settling Muslim Arab contingents in the North was a way of helping to subdue the local Christian populations with their centrifugal tendencies. As the prominence of the Bagratuni, Arcruni, and Siwni houses grew in the ninth and tenth centuries, emirates were settled strategically in places in-between the borders of the three dominant houses in order to cut them off from one another and disrupt their ability to unite against the caliphal center. Thus, the emirate of Duin and Goltʿn were strategically placed beside the Bagratid realm and Siwnikʿ, while also separating Siwnikʿ from Arcruni Vaspurakan; the Qaysite emirate separated the Bagratid realm from Tarōn, while also bordering Vaspurakan.⁴⁵ These locations also had the strategic geographical advantage of being close to river valleys or shoreline where the urban centers were located and connected to one another by roads along which supplies or troops could be transported. However, once the emirates became land owners and woven to a certain degree into the naxarar structure, they often became autonomous elements in their own right that did not necessarily align with the policies of the caliphal center.⁴⁶ Their integration into local Armenian society is exemplified by several cases of intermarriage between emirs with the daughters of prominent Armenian houses, including both the Mamikonean and Arcruni in the eighth and ninth centuries.⁴⁷

⁴² Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 21–22, 32–33.

⁴³ This is one of the principal observations in Ter-Ghewondyan's Arab Emirates in Bagratid Armenia.

⁴⁴ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 31; Garsoïan, "Arab Invasions," 134.

The emirates also enabled the establishment of a permanent military presence along the borders of the caliphate with Byzantium in the West and with the Khazars in the North, especially important since the latter often joined forces with the Byzantines in their attacks against the caliphate.⁴⁸ Skirmishes, raids, and battles between Arab and Byzantine armies are a defining feature of the seventh and eighth centuries, and the near constant warfare between the Arab and Byzantine armies led to the development of a fortified frontier zone along the border between the two realms, known in Arabic as the thughūr, that stretched from the Tarsus mountains in Cilicia through Malatya/Melintēnē and on to Karin/Theodosiopolis/Qālīqalā.⁴⁹ While the Byzantine agenda was to create a neutral wasteland, a no-man’s land that would act as

⁴⁵ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 88. See Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 87, p. 111.

⁴⁶ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 49.

⁴⁷ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 33–34, 45–50, 56.

⁴⁸ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 29, 49.

⁴⁹ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 22; Bowsorth and Latham, “al-Thughūr.”

a protective uninhabitable barrier between their realm and the caliphate, the Arabs, on the other hand, built fortified castles in the thughūr in which they housed armies in order to conduct their annual raids into Byzantine territory.⁵⁰ The constant military activity in the thughūr was disruptive to the native population and led to the introduction of new demographic elements there, such as Turkic tribes. It also became home to “heretical” Christian communities such as the Paulicians, and later the Tʿondrakeans, who generally sided with the Arabs in the hostilities that stretched across the borderlands.⁵¹ The Tʿondrakean community became more prominent in Armenian ecclesiastical history in the tenth and eleventh centuries, ceasing to be a solely fringe movement and becoming associated with certain monasteries and clerics of the church. Anania of Narek was commissioned to write a refutation against this movement that was circulated and cited by many of his contemporaries and subsequent figures, including Grigor of Narek, Grigor Magistros, and Nersēs Shnorhali. Despite this treatise, he, like many other monks and ascetic figures of the time, was himself denounced as a Tʿondrakite, and was required to write a statement in his defense. The fourth chapter will look more closely at the social and religious dimensions of this and other ecclesiastical crises in the period, focusing especially on explaining the application of the “Tʿondrakecʿi” heretical label to monks and ascetics like Anania and his protégé Grigor.

⁵⁰ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 23.

⁵¹ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 24. On these religious groups, which will be discussed more in the fourth chapter, see Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy; Nersessian, Tondrakian Movement.

Contextual Factors Related to the Establishment of Armenian Kingship

Another important factor that preceded the establishment of the Bagratid kingdom of Greater Armenia in the second half of the ninth century was the rise of autonomous, centrifugal tendencies in the Arab emirates and then also the governor (ostikan) of the North. We hear, for example, of cases where emirs led revolts, or military expeditions, against the ostikan (the caliphal representative in the North) in the ninth century. One prominent example was the twenty-year period of unrest known as the revolt of Bābak (816–837), in which this Persian chief rebelled against the caliph and made himself master of a large domain in the regions of Caucasian Albania and Ādharbayjān.⁵² Another example is the emīr Jaḥḥāf who married the daughter of a Mamikonean prince and seized the former Mamikonean domain of Tarōn as well as Širak and Aršarunik^ʿ from the Kamsarakans.⁵³ Jaḥḥāf also conquered and briefly held Duin, the traditional capital and seat of the ostikan, who recently had set up an alternate residence in Partaw (Bardha^ʿa) in Arrān (Caucasian Albania). Such activity destabilized the official power structure of the region, and was also threatening to the caliphal center, since the caliph was represented in the North in the person of the ostikan. Such centrifugal activity, initiated especially by Iranian elements in the caliphate breaking against the centralized rule of the caliphs, picked up momentum in the ninth century and continued into the tenth, benefitting from the economic troubles and political instability that plagued the caliphal capital.⁵⁴

Other challenges to the caliphal center came from the ostikan itself. In the Umayyad period, there was no hereditary succession to the office of ostikan of Armīniya.⁵⁵ The constant

⁵² Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 107; Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 37–38.

⁵³ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 33–35.

⁵⁴ On the economic troubles and instability of the caliphal center, see Waines, “Third Century Internal Crisis.”

⁵⁵ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 43.

changing of the position assured the loyalty of the ostikan to the caliph. But during the ‘Abbāsīd period, this dynamic changed. With the settling of an Arab population in Armīniya, certain of the dominant emirates that had established hereditary domains in the North came to control the position of ostikan in hereditary fashion. Examples include the Shaybānī and Sulamī ostikans.⁵⁶ In line with centrifugal tendencies observable across the caliphate and the caliph’s own desire for the North to be fragmented into smaller, more manageable polities, the ostikanate of Armīniya also transitioned into a hereditary office that could better balance the dominant naxarar families of the period.⁵⁷ However, the ostikanate itself then often ran counter to the interests of the caliphal center, and acted in its own autonomous interests, leading to many cases of conflict between the caliph and the ostikan.⁵⁸

The Making of Armenian Kings

By the second half of the ninth century, then, the position and authority of the caliphs was threatened by crisis at the center and centrifugal forces within the caliphate, i.e. the ostikan of the North and the other autonomous emirates and dynastic polities emerging during the so-called Iranian intermezzo. Complicating matters further, they were threatened by a resurgent Byzantium to the West, which under Basil I was attacking the western border of Armenia, and making overtures to the Bagratuni prince to seek to secure his loyalty against the caliph.⁵⁹ In an effort to ensure the loyalty of the Armenians amidst these internal and external threats, in 862 the caliph ⁵⁶ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 43–44.

⁵⁷ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 43.

⁵⁸ A good example is the early tenth-century Sājīd ostikan Yūsuf, who was imprisoned for three years by the caliph al-Muqtadir on grounds of insubordination. See Bosworth, “Sājīds.”

⁵⁹ Garsoīan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 143–44.

ordered the ostikan of Armīniya, then seated in Partaw/Bardha‘a to invest Bagratuni prince Ašot with robes and insignia, confer on him the title “prince of princes (išxan išxanac’),” and grant him the authority to collect taxes in his realm and send the required tribute directly to the caliph.⁶⁰ This officially acknowledged his position over the local Muslim emirates and Christian naxarars of the North and meant that in several respects, such as taxation and tribute, he could deal directly with the caliph and no longer had to work through the intermediary of the ostikan.⁶¹ The ostikan of Armīniya still retained formal authority over Ašot, and in the coming years the Bagratid ruler and the ostikan often clashed with one another, perhaps a positive development as seen from the perspective of the weakened caliph, who sought to set the autonomous polities against one another in a ‘divide and rule’ strategy. In 884, a crown was sent by Caliph al-Mu‘tamid (870 – 892) and brought to Ašot by the ostikan in order for him to be crowned king of Armenia by the catholicos. While this ceremony held great significance for the local Armenian population, who hailed it as the return of Armenian kingship, it seems to have brought little appreciable change to the power dynamic between Ašot, the ostikan, and the caliph.⁶² Shortly after this coronation ceremony, Byzantine Emperor Basil I (867 – 886), competing for Bagratuni loyalty, offered gestures of friendship, honor, and peace, referring to Ašot in a letter as his “beloved son (որդի սիրելի),” thereby seeking, albeit ineffectually at the time, to assert his own suzerainty over the Bagratuni king.⁶³

⁶⁰ Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 147.

⁶¹ Garsoïan, “The Independent Kingdoms,” 147–48; Laurent and Canard, “L’Arménie entre Byzance et l’Islam,” 323.

⁶² Bagratuni kings never struck their own coins and remained tributary to the caliphate throughout the length of their kingdom. Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 148.

⁶³ Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc‘i, History of Armenia XXIX, MH 11:444.10.

During the reign of Ašot (prince of princes, 862 – 884; king, 884 – 890), there was a brief period of unity in Greater Armenia, with marriage ties uniting the three great Armenian houses with one another under the Bagratuni king. However, in line with precedent well established in earlier eras, centrifugal tendencies among the other leading naxarar families led to the establishment of break-away rival and minor kingdoms by first the Arcruni and then the Siwni, and the subsequent internal fragmentation of the Bagratuni realm itself into smaller kingdoms. This was a welcome development from the perspective of the caliphal center as well as the Byzantine Empire, both of which could more easily manage a fractured Armenia than one strong and unified.⁶⁴

By the late ninth century, Vaspurakan, the southern portion of Greater Armenia where Anania was active, had largely come under the unified control of the Arcruni family after a number of successful military campaigns against the ‘Uthmānids.⁶⁵ The ‘Uthmānids were a Muslim emirate that had expanded their domains in the south by taking advantage of the devastating military campaigns (851 – 852, 855 – 856) in Armenia ordered by Caliph al-Mutawakkil and carried out by (Turkish) general Bughā al-Kabīr after a rebellion led by an Armenian northern and southern alliance between Bagarat Bagratuni and Ašot Arcruni.⁶⁶ While there was rivalry among the scions of the Arcruni family over the dominant position, a marriage

⁶⁴ It is worth mentioning as well that initially the K‘art‘velized branch of the Bagratid house, known in Georgian as the Bagrationis, who had reigned as princes in Iberia since 813, accepted the suzerainty of the Armenian king, but soon established an autonomous kingdom of their own in 888, with a similar relation to the caliph as the Armenian Bagratuni king. See Rapp, “Georgia before the Mongols;” Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 9. By the early eleventh century, they had brought eastern and western Georgia into a unified whole (Sak‘art‘velo), which began an era that has been deemed a “golden age” by modern historians, in which the Bagrationis reigned as the dominant Christian power in the Caucasus. See Metreveli, Golden Age.

⁶⁵ The details of the military battles and campaigns that eventually led to the extension of the borders of the ruling Arcruni noblemen across all of Vaspurakan in the second half of the ninth century are detailed in the History of the House of the Arcrunik‘ by T‘ovma Arcruni and his Anonymous Continuator, as well as in the History of Armenia of Catholicos Yovhannēs Draxanakertc‘i.

⁶⁶ On the rebellion and military campaigns of Bughā l-Kabīr, see Garsoïan, “Arab Invasions,” 140–42.

alliance between išxan Grigor-Derenik Arcruni (r. 857 – 868, 874 – 887) and Sop‘i (Sofia), the daughter of Ašot I Bagratuni, strengthened Grigor-Derenik’s position among his fellow princes in Vaspurakan, and also contributed to the unity of Greater Armenia under Ašot Bagratuni’s leadership.⁶⁷

This unity however was not long-lasting, as Grigor-Derenik’s sons looked to the establishment of a separate kingdom of Vaspurakan. Grigor-Derenik’s eldest son, Ašot, had ambitions to establish a separatist kingdom, but these were squashed by Smbat I (r. 890 – 914), the son and successor of Ašot Bagratuni.⁶⁸ The goal was eventually realized by Grigor-Derenik’s younger son Gagik, who through his mother Sop‘i, was the grandson of the first Bagratuni king Ašot I and nephew of then King Smbat I. Upon the death of his brother Ašot Arcruni, Gagik succeeded as the prince of Vaspurakan in 904. Smbat’s decision to return the important city of Naxčawan to Siwnik‘ — after having recently granted it to Arcruni Vaspurakan for their help in putting down the revolt of the Qaysite emirs of Manazkert — served as the pretext for Gagik’s revolt against the Bagratuni king. In order to advance his own standing, Gagik made an alliance with the Sājīd governor (ostikan) of Armīniya and Ādharbayjān, Yūsuf b. Abi ‘l Sāj Dīwdād (r. 901 – 919, 922 – 929), who had moved his capital to Ardabīl and was fighting with the Bagratuni King Smbat.⁶⁹ Their alliance was made in 908, and in return, the ostikan Yūsuf recognized Gagik as “king of Armenia.” This marked the beginning of Vaspurakan as a kingdom separate from the Bagratuni realm, and, at least in the ostikan’s eyes, as having precedence over it.⁷⁰ The two then set out on a military campaign that led to the capture and imprisonment of Smbat. The Bagratuni

⁶⁷ See Mahé, Histoire de l’Arménie, 130.

⁶⁸ Mahé, Histoire de l’Arménie, 130.

⁶⁹ Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 155–58; Bosworth, “Sādjids.”

⁷⁰ Zuckerman, “Catholicos Anania of Mokk‘,” 847.

king was later put to death along with other members of the Bagratuni royal family, an outcome that Gagik seems not to have anticipated. He subsequently broke off his alliance with Yūsuf and the two went to war against one another.⁷¹

Gagik Arcruni and the Founding of Narek Monastery

Gagik, under whose initiative Narek monastery was founded, was an ambitious and skillful ruler, through whose machinations and during whose reign the epicenter of Armenian political power temporarily migrated from the Bagratunis in the North to the Arcrunis in the South.⁷² At least, this seems to have been the way things were perceived by the Byzantine Empire at the time. A letter from Nicholas I Mystikos (Patriarch of Constantinople, sed. 901 – 907, 912 – 925) written to Gagik ca. 924 addresses Gagik as “ruler of rulers” (τῷ ἄρχοντι τῶν ἀρχόντων), a Greek calque on the Armenian “prince of princes” (išxan išxanac), most likely signaling the primacy among Armenian kings that Gagik then held in the eyes of the imperial elite.⁷³ Gagik’s son and successor, Grigor-Derenik (Derenik-Ašot, r. ca. 943 – 953/8) seems able to have maintained this status into the 950s, as evidenced by another Greek text from that time — the De ceremoniis aulae byzantinae, commissioned by Emperor Constantine VII

⁷¹ Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 156–59; Mahé, Histoire de l’Arménie, 136–37.

⁷² It was not until after Gagik’s death, during the reign of Bagratuni King Ašot III Olormac (‘the Merciful’) that scholars see the balance of power having shifted decisively back to the northern Bagratid kingdom. See Zuckerman, “Catholicos Anania of Mokk’,” 847; Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 164; Greenwood, “Armenian Neighbours,” 354–55.

⁷³ Nicholas Mystikos, Letters, no. 139, pp. 446–51. See Greenwood, “Armenian Neighbours,” 355; Maksoudian, “Biography” in Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc’i, History of Armenia, 21–23.

Porphyrogenitus (r. 945 – 959) — that maintains the same terminology for the king of Vaspurakan (ἄρχων τῶν ἀρχόντων).⁷⁴

Gagik was also able to bring the central institution of ecclesiastical power, the catholicate, to Vaspurakan. In the beginning of the 920s, Catholicos Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc ‘the Historian’ (sed. 898 – 924/5) fled from the traditional residence at Duin — where catholicoi had resided since the middle of the fifth century — due to unstable conditions brought about by the military expeditions of the ostikan Yūsuf. The final destination of the catholicos’ flight in the ⁷⁴ Constantine VII Porphyrogenitus, De ceremoniis aulae Byzantinae II.48. For an updated Greek edition of this section, see Martin-Hisard, “Constantinople et les archontes,” 359–530 at 368. The passage in question relating to the Bagratuni and Arcruni kings reads as follows:

Εἰς τὸν ἄρχοντα τῶν ἀρχόντων τῆς μεγάλης Ἀρμενίας. βούλλα χρυσῆ τρισολδία.

“Κωνσταντῖνος καὶ Ῥωμανός, πιστοὶ ἐν Χριστῷ τῷ Θεῷ αὐτοκράτορες αὐγουστοὶ μεγάλοι βασιλεῖς Ῥωμαίων, πρὸς ὁ δεῖνα τὸν περιφανέστατον πρῶτον τῆς μεγάλης Ἀρμενίας καὶ πνευματικὸν ἡμῶν τέκνον.”

Εἰς τὸν ἄρχοντα τοῦ Ἀσπουρακᾶν, ἡγουν Βασπαρακᾶν, ὁ νῦν τιμηθεὶς ἄρχων τῶν ἀρχόντων. βούλλα χρυσῆ τρισολδία.

“Κωνσταντῖνος καὶ Ῥωμανός, πιστοὶ ἐν Χριστῷ τῷ Θεῷ αὐτοκράτορες αὐγουστοὶ βασιλεῖς Ῥωμαίων, πρὸς ὁ δεῖνα περιφανέστατον ἄρχοντα τῶν ἀρχόντων.”

It does not seem possible from this passage alone to conclude that the king of Vaspurakan was held in higher honor than that of the king of Bagratuni, although this text does have indications in that regard. The honor accorded to each in terms of titulature is nearly identical. Both are referred to as “ruler of rulers” (εἰς τὸν ἄρχοντα τῶν ἀρχόντων). The Bagratuni king is listed first, which could perhaps indicate primacy, although this may have more to do with the fact that it was the Bagratuni who were first crowned kings. The other question then revolves around their domain. What are they deemed “king of kings” of? The Bagratuni king is addressed as τὸν ἄρχοντα τῶν ἀρχόντων τῆς μεγάλης Ἀρμενίας (“the ruler of rulers of Greater Armenia, i.e. մեծ Հայք”). Does this mean that in the eyes of the Byzantine emperor, he is king over all other kings throughout Armenian lands, or just limited to those in Greater Armenia (i.e. the current Bagratuni realm)? The grammar and context seems to favor the latter, more limited interpretation, although leaving it ambiguous would be good for diplomatic relations. The Bagratuni king is also addressed as πνευματικὸν ἡμῶν τέκνον (“our beloved son/child”), a way of address that as we saw above goes back at least as far to the way Emperor Basil I addressed Ašot I. The Arcruni king is first addressed as τὸν ἄρχοντα τοῦ Ἀσπουρακᾶν, ἡγουν Βασπαρακᾶν (“the ruler of Vaspurakan”), but then there is an additional clause indicating his recent elevated status: ὁ νῦν τιμηθεὶς ἄρχων τῶν ἀρχόντων (“who is now honored as ruler of rulers”). Significantly, the title “ruler of rulers” is not limited to the realm of Vaspurakan (that would be: τὸν ἄρχοντα τῶν ἀρχόντων τοῦ Ἀσπουρακᾶν, which is not what we have here) but rather seems to apply more universally (i.e. ruler over all other Armenian rulers). Would this then imply that he is also king over the king of Greater Armenia? It is difficult to say, but the text could be read that way. In all likelihood, given that this manual is concerned with proper titulature for diplomatic relations, the text is probably more concerned with addressing the Bagratuni and Arcruni kings as they would want to be addressed, i.e. consonant with the claims they are making about themselves, and not attempting to assert primacy of one over the other. To further complicate matters, the date of the text is not certain. While sections of the text go back to earlier centuries, it was compiled and revised into its present form by Constantine VII Porphyrogenitus in the 950s. We do not always know with certainty which portions derive from earlier material and which were subject to revisions. Nor can we be certain that there were not later interpolations, additions, or adjustments after the 950s. On the dating of the different portions of the De ceremoniis, see McCormick, “De Ceremoniis,” Lemerle, Le premier humanisme, 274–78.

winter of 923/4 was Gagik’s newly built palatial residence on the island of Alt‘amar located about 3 km from the shoreline in the southern portion of Lake Van.⁷⁵ Catholicos Yovhannēs died shortly thereafter, and King Gagik played a leading role in the election of the next four catholicoi, with the result that all four hailed from southern houses of Vaspurakan and maintained their residence beside him at Alt‘amar until his death.⁷⁶ Therefore, during the bulk of Gagik’s reign from the 920s to the 940s, the island of Alt‘amar and the city of Ostan on the adjacent shore of Lake Van where Gagik had constructed his first palace⁷⁷ marked themselves out not just as the capital of Vaspurakan, but as the epicenter of Armenian political and ecclesiastical power.⁷⁸

It is in precisely this period that nearby the Arcruni capital of Ostan and the island of Alt‘amar, a short distance removed from the southwestern shore of Lake Van, the monastery of Narek was founded ca. 930s–940s.⁷⁹ As I will discuss in the next chapter, Gagik seems to have ⁷⁵ Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 161–62.

⁷⁶ These are Step‘anos II Rštuni (sed. ca. 924/5 – 925), T‘ēodoros I Rštuni (sed. 925 – 934/5), Elišē Rštuni (sed. 934/5 – 941/2, and Anania Mokac‘i (941/2 – ca. 965/6). See Greenwood, Universal History, 222 n. 89 and 91–92, 232 n. 155. Although there is not a great deal of information on the election of catholicoi in this period, with the return of kingship in Armenia in the ninth century, the king (and then kings, in the tenth century) appears to have begun to take a leading role in the election of catholicoi. See Hats‘uni, Kat‘oghikosakan ěntrut‘iwn, 33. Referencing his own election to the catholicate, Anania Mokac‘i first lists “Lord Gagik Arcruni, King of Armenia (տեառնն Գագիկայ Արծրունոյ Հայոց Թագաւորի)” and then “Lord Abas Bagratuni... King of Greater Armenia (տեառնն Աբասայ Բագրատունոյ... Մեծի Հայոց արքայի),” followed by “their royal scions as well as all the bishops, monastics, and other ascetic solitaries, and the requests and unanimous appeals of priors (սոցին թագազան զարմիցն եւ համաւրէն եպիսկոպոսաց եւ վանականաց եւ այլ ճգնաւոր մենաւորաց, առաջնորդից հայցմանց եւ միաձայն բողոքանաց).” See Anania Mokac‘i, “Concerning the Rebellion of the House of the Albanians,” MH 10:256.6–7. This seems to indicate that King Gagik took the leading role in the election of Anania, and by implication, his three predecessors. See Hats‘uni, Kat‘oghikosakan ěntrut‘iwn, 33–34; Maksoudian, Chosen of God, 37.

⁷⁷ T‘ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuators], History of the House of the Arcrunik‘ IV.6, MH 11:285–87, trans. Thomson, 352–54.

⁷⁸ It was Catholicos Anania Mokac‘i (941/2 – ca. 965/6) — a powerful ecclesiastical figure about whom more will be said later — who relocated the catholicosal residence north to Argina in Bagratuni territory seven years into his catholicate at the end of the 940s. See Mahé, Histoire de l’Arménie, 145–46; Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 163–64, 171.

⁷⁹ The date of its founding will be discussed in the next chapter.

funded and built the monastery in order to have a spiritual and intellectual center near his capital to further heighten his prestige and win the backing of the monastic contingent. This foundation expressed Gagik's sponsorship of the spiritual/monastic sphere of society, in addition to his growing influence in the political and ecclesiastical (episcopal/hierarchical) spheres. Just as he had wrested political and catholicosal prestige from the Bagratuni realm and relocated it to Vaspurakan, so also did Gagik convince Anania and Petros, two renowned young vardapets who dwelt in monasteries located in the Bagratuni realm, to relocate to Vaspurakan in order to head up the newly founded monastery of Narek.⁸⁰ Anania was made abbot and charged with regulating the monastery's internal life, which will be the subject of Chapter Three.

Narek and New Trends in Armenian Monastic Life

The foundation of Narek was part of a regional proliferation of large, cenobitic monastic establishments in the period from the second half of the ninth to the eleventh century. After a review of the foundation dates of the 200 monastic institutions that can be firmly established as having predated the Battle of Manazkert (1071), Sergio La Porta notes that intense building activity "began at the end of the ninth, climaxed during the tenth, and then slowed down slightly during the eleventh. The majority of monasteries known to have been established during the pre-Seljuk era date from this period."⁸¹ The late tenth/early eleventh-century historian Step'anos ⁸⁰ Anania's contemporary Samuēl Kamrġajorec'ī (ca. 940 – ca. 1010) reports that the vardapets Petros and Anania first dwelt in Antak' and then in Xavarajor before they dwelt in Narek (Պետրոս եւ Անանիա վարդապետք, որ յառաջագոյն յԱնտաք եւ ապա ի Խաւարաձոր եւ յետոյ ի Նարեկ բնակեցան). See Samuēl Kamrġajorec'ī, Explanation of Feasts, MH 10:718–22 at 720.20. See T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats'ī, 22–26; idem, Grigor Narekats' in ev narekyan dprots'ē, 2:114–18. Antak' was a monastery located to the far southwest of the Bagratid realm close to the frontier in the district of Hawnunik', about 100 km north of Lake Van and just south of the Araxes river. Xavarajor is thought to be located to the east of Antak' in the Bagratid district of Aršarunik'. See Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 91, page 115; HHSHTB, s.v. Antak'; Xavarajor.

⁸¹ La Porta, Review of Répertoire, 160.

Tarōnec'ī singles out the tenth century as a resplendent period of building activity.⁸² It was also a period marked by the building of significant civil infrastructure and public works projects. The intense building activity was a product of the booming economy in this period in the caliphate, into which Armenia was tightly integrated, and more broadly across the Mediterranean. From 750–1000, the Islamic world witnessed expansion across nearly every realm of the economy, including extraction of natural resources, mining, and monetization; agricultural production; manufacturing; higher levels of education, literacy, and specialization in the labor and service sectors; an increase in urbanization, trade, commerce, and markets; and a sophisticated system of centralized taxation.⁸³ Naturally, most of these trends are also observable in Armenia, and will be examined in more detail in the following chapter in conjunction with a more detailed treatment of the religious and civil building projects of the period.⁸⁴ The profit and expendable wealth available to Armenian rulers in this period seems to be particularly connected with the increase of traffic in international trade and mercantile activity through Armenian territory.

One of the main features setting apart the monasteries founded in this period from the earlier one was their scale and size.⁸⁵ The contemporary historian Step'anos Tarōnec'ī Asoḷik records, for example, that Kamrjajor monastery housed 300 monks, while Haḷbat and Sanahin together contained some 500.⁸⁶ It can be assumed that many of those newly entering into the monastic communities in this period were young and inexperienced. Furthermore, monastic ⁸² Universal History III.7, MH 15:750–54.19–56; III.8, MH 15:755.1–8, tr. Greenwood, 224–32; French translation in Mahé, Grégoire de Narek; Tragédie, 9–13.

⁸³ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth.”

⁸⁴ The Armenian rulers profited especially from their facilitation of international trade, collecting transit fees for the transport of goods across their territory, as trade routes passed through both the Bagratid realm and Vaspurakan. See Manandian, Trade and Cities, 129–72.

⁸⁵ Cowe, “Armenians in the Era of the Crusades,” 411.

⁸⁶ See Step'anos Tarōnec'ī, Universal History III.7, MH 15:750.22, III.8, MH 15:755.7, tr. Greenwood, 224–25, 232.

communities on this scale in the Armenian context were unprecedented and therefore must have presented new challenges to those living within them, as well as abbots like Anania, who were charged with regulating life in the monasteries. This context forms the backdrop for the number of xrats (ascetical instructions) written by Anania. They cover a range of topics, including humility, patience and peace, prayer, thoughts, spiritual mourning with tears, the transience of earthly life, how to live according to the precepts of the Scriptures, and admonition for priests. A series was commissioned by Bishop Xaç'ik Aršaruni, future Catholicos Xaç'ik I (sed. 972/3 – 990/1),⁸⁷ and may have circulated among a number of the newly founded cenobitic monasteries in order to inculcate ethical virtues and the monastic worldview. As such, they may have been used as templates to instruct novices on how to live together harmoniously in community and to offer teaching on various ascetic practices and the attainment of virtue. I will cover this topic in the third chapter.

ARMENIA AMID BYZANTINE EXPANSION

The tenth and early eleventh centuries are marked by further fragmentation of the Armenian kingdoms and the advance of the Byzantine Empire across the Armenian plateau. The principality of Siwnik' in the southeast of Greater Armenia, a region which had for long exhibited separatist tendencies, broke off from the Bagratid kingdom and established a separate kingdom in the second half of the tenth century. A number of other minor kingdoms and principalities followed suit in Caucasian Albania and the eastern portions of Armīniya.⁸⁸ This movement had its parallel in the ecclesiastical sphere, with the bishop of Siwnik' clashing with ⁸⁷ T'amrazyan, Grigor Narekats' in ev Narekyan dprots'ē, 2:132–34, 144; idem, Anania Narekats'i, 192–222.

⁸⁸ Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 119–23.

catholicos Anania Mokac‘i when the centralizing policies of the latter encountered the secessionist tendencies of the former. Such a dynamic had occurred in previous periods, most notably in the second half of the sixth to early seventh centuries, as will be discussed further in the fourth and fifth chapters. In the latter tenth century and into the eleventh, the Bagratid kingdom itself fractured into smaller units. A separate Bagratid kingdom was established in Kars in 982 and then another in Lori-Tašir (Tašir-Joraget).⁸⁹

The weakening of the central power of the caliphate combined with the centrifugal tendencies of the Armenian royal houses, their fragmentation into smaller, separate kingdoms and principalities, and their overall lack of unity, contributed to the success of the Byzantine expansion into Armenia. The Byzantine Empire pushed the border southwards into Cilicia, northern Syria, and Mesopotamia and eastwards across Anatolia into Lesser and Greater Armenia from the late ninth to early eleventh centuries.⁹⁰ This expansion brought with it certain demographic changes that raised ecclesiastical issues in which Anania played a vocal and pivotal role. A brief survey of these developments will set the stage for a more detailed examination of Anania’s role in these issues in the fifth chapter.

The Byzantine expansion southwards into Cilicia and northern Syria and eastwards into Lesser and Greater Armenia was achieved by the militaristic Macedonian dynasty (867–1056). The dynasty’s founder, Basil I (867–886), undertook campaigns in eastern Cappadocia, northern Syria, and western Armenia against the emirates that controlled those territories.⁹¹ Under Basil I, ⁸⁹ Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 114–15; Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 166–67.

⁹⁰ On the Byzantine expansion in this period and the empire’s relations with Armenia, see Greenwood, “Armenian Neighbours;” Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 109–24; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 124–26; For maps, see Greenwood, “Armenian Neighbours,” 350; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 105, p. 125. For an overview of the Byzantine Empire during this period in general, see Shepard, “Equilibrium to Expansion;” Treadgold, Byzantine State and Society, 446–611.

⁹¹ Treadgold, Byzantine State and Society, 455–61;

Sebasteia was reconquered, and by 911, during the reign of Leo VI (886–912), it became a Byzantine theme (frontier military province).⁹²

As mentioned above, the Arab-Byzantine frontier zone had been abandoned by much of its civilian population due to the annual warfare conducted there. Before the Byzantine conquests, the inhabitants were sparsely populated and comprised of Paulicians, Arab military units, and many of mixed background with complex identities.⁹³ After the empire conquered and gained control over territory in a more lasting fashion beginning in the tenth century, it needed to populate it with permanent civilian residents. Unsurprisingly, there was little interest among Byzantine communities to move east into the newly reconquered territories. Thus, Armenian and Syriac non-Chalcedonian Christians formed the majority of those who were encouraged to resettle in these territories.⁹⁴ This in turn led to confessional tensions and ecclesiastical controversies between imperial and Syriac and Armenian church hierarchs over matters of Christology and Ecclesiology, the validity of sacraments, and episcopal jurisdiction. The imperial church expected the non-Chalcedonian communities to conform to their norms, as had been the case with previous waves of Armenians that had settled in Byzantine lands in earlier eras.⁹⁵ When Armenian and Syriac leaders offered resistance, relations soured and took a hostile and then violent turn.

The next major military advance occurred during the reign of Romanos I Lekapenos (920–944), led by the able Armeno-Byzantine general John Kourkouas (Gurgen).⁹⁶ Kourkouas

⁹² Treadgold, Byzantine State and Society, 466–470; Hild and Restle, Kappadokien, 85, 274; Cowe, “Armenian Immigration,” 116;

⁹³ See Eger, Islamic-Byzantine Frontier, 290–94.

⁹⁴ On Syrian and Armenian immigration to the Byzantine reconquered territories, see Cowe, “Armenian Immigration.”

⁹⁵ See Kaldellis, Romanland, 155–95.

⁹⁶ See Treadgold, Byzantine State and Society, 476–86.

led raids deep into Muslim territory, reaching as far as Duin on two occasions (in 922 and 928/9).⁹⁷ Under his command and with the assistance of Armenian troops, the Byzantines captured Melitenē in 934 and took control of eastern Cappadocia.⁹⁸ Here Syrians were encouraged to settle, Melitenē having already been the seat of a Syrian bishopric since 793.⁹⁹ The repeated raids of John Kourkouas into the territory of the Qaysite emirs eventually reduced the latter to vassals. In 949, during the reign of Constantine VII Porphyrogenitus (945–959), the strategic military outpost and capital of the Qaysite emirate, Qālīqalā (Gk. Theodosiupolis, Arm. Karin), was captured.¹⁰⁰

During the reign of Nikephoros Phocas (963–969), the frontier was pushed further eastwards and southwards. Under his command, the Byzantine army defeated the emir of Tarsus and in 969 captured Antioch.¹⁰¹ In 966/967, the Bagratid principality of Tarōn was annexed and incorporated into the empire.¹⁰² Karin and Basean were also taken and then Manazkert (Manzikert) in 969.¹⁰³ By means of these conquests, Cappadocia was no longer a frontier province and enjoyed a period of relative peace and stability from 965 to 1065.¹⁰⁴ These victories and the stability of eastern Cappadocia ushered in a vast Armenian immigration into the theme of Sebasteia, as well as an influx of Syrians settling particularly in and around Melitenē.¹⁰⁵

The settlement of non-Chalcedonian Christian communities of Armenians and Syrians into the borders of the empire naturally raised a number of issues. First of all, non-Chalcedonian ⁹⁷ Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 75–77; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 124.

⁹⁸ Shepard, “Equilibrium to Expansion,” 509.

⁹⁹ Cowe, “Armenian Immigration,” 113.

¹⁰⁰ Greenwood, “Armenian Neighbours,” 356; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 124.

¹⁰¹ Treadgold, Byzantine State and Society, 504–05; Shepard, “Expansion to Equilibrium,” 520.

¹⁰² Greenwood, “Armenian Neighbours,” 357.

¹⁰³ Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 124; Greenwood, “Armenian Neighbours,” 357; Treadgold, Byzantine State and Society, 504.

¹⁰⁴ Cowe, “Armenian Immigration,” 116; Hild and Restle, Kappadokien, 91.

¹⁰⁵ Cowe, “Armenian Immigration,” 113–16.

and Chalcedonian episcopal hierarchies overlapped in these areas. Newly founded or expanded or relocated Armenian and Syrian bishops shared jurisdiction with newly founded imperial Chalcedonian ones.¹⁰⁶ Confessional tensions seem to have rapidly escalated in this unprecedented situation, with the denial of the validity of the other church's sacraments issued by clerics on both sides.¹⁰⁷ Influential Armenian churchmen of the period, including Anania of Narek, argued that the Armenian Church should adopt the same policy as the Byzantines took towards Armenians, so that those who had received baptism at the hands of Chalcedonians and wanted to participate in Armenian sacraments must be rebaptized according to the Armenian rite. These tensions soon escalated from hostile polemics to violence. The Syrian patriarch was brought to Constantinople for discussions ca. 966 and detained for three years. Matters grew worse in the second half of the tenth century, with Chalcedonian attempts to interfere in patriarchal elections and force bishops to adopt the Chalcedonian creed.¹⁰⁸ In the 980s, we hear of the torture of Armenian priests and of the Armenian bishops of Sebasteia and Larissa being compelled to accept the Council of Chalcedon under force by the Byzantine metropolitan of Sebasteia.¹⁰⁹ The imperial metropolitans of Sebasteia and Melintenē sent polemical letters to the Armenian catholicos, denying the Armenian church's right to autocephaly and accusing it of Christological heresy.

Anania of Narek was one among a cluster of vardapets who played a significant role in these dire contemporary ecclesiastical issues facing the Armenian church, by engaging in the confessional battle with their pens and advising the catholicos as to actions to take on the ground.

¹⁰⁶ Cowe, "Armenian Immigration," 117–18; Greenwood, "Armenian Neighbours," 358–59.

¹⁰⁷ Cowe, "Armenian Immigration," 117–18; Dagron, "Minorités ethniques et religieuses," 211.

¹⁰⁸ Cowe, "Armenian Immigration," 114–15; Hild and Restle, Kappadokien, 118–19.

¹⁰⁹ Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.20; Greenwood, "Armenian Neighbours," 358–59.

At the request of the catholicos, he composed/compiled the Root of Faith, which he presented to Catholicos Xaç'ik Aršaruni in the 980s, to defend the Christological, apostolic, and liturgical validity of the Armenian church vis-à-vis the polemical attacks sent by imperial bishops.¹¹⁰ He likewise commissioned his former student Uxtanēs to compose a tripartite history in order to address, among other topics, the contemporary clashes with the Chalcedonian imperial church. Uxtanēs had been educated by Anania at the monastery of Narek and became bishop of Sebasteia, where he carried on Anania's mission in person in the area most under threat from Chalcedonian pressure. Finally, Anania's Nerbol reformulates some of the dialectical argumentation of the Root of Faith into rhetorical and poetic form, celebrating the Armenian church as the tradition which has clung most faithfully to the faith of the fathers of the early Church, claiming by implication that the imperial church had gone astray in introducing new and heretical doctrines, a point that is made explicit in the Root of Faith and the letters of other vardapets that issue from the same period. The fifth chapter will look more closely at these works and the contemporary issues that they responded to, setting Anania's voice in conversation with other contemporaries, who were also responding to the new situation vis-à-vis the expanding Byzantine Empire.

After the death of Anania in the late tenth century, Basil II (976–1025) continued the expansion of the Byzantine Empire eastwards into Greater Armenia.¹¹¹ Whereas the empire had won territory from the caliphate through military engagement with the emirates, Basil II won Armenian territory primarily through diplomacy and/or coercion, gaining control of the reduced and fragmented realms of Greater Armenia by having it bequeathed to the empire in wills written up by Armenian dynasts. While Anania of Narek and others of the period looked with hostility upon the imperialistic advances of the Byzantine church and state into Armenia, other Armenians seem to have looked upon it more favorably or more readily accepted it as the new norm.¹¹² Notably, Anania's own protégé, Grigor of Narek praised the conquests of Basil II and the expansion of the Christian Byzantine Empire.¹¹³ While his praise is often interpreted as reflective of Grigor's supposedly pro-Byzantine feeling, one suspects his approach may have been more pragmatic and subtle. At this later stage, one could see the writing on the wall, and perhaps Grigor was hoping that by greeting the emperor with panegyric, he could inspire a return of reciprocally friendly and tolerant church policies. Basil II, in fact, did bring about an end to the hostile and intolerant ecclesiastical policies that had been enacted by the imperial bishops in the eastern territories of the empire when he visited the region in person, and for this reason he is lauded as a good emperor in Armenian sources.

¹¹⁰ T'amrazyan, Grigor Narekats' in ev Narekyan dprots' ě, 2:130.

¹¹¹ On this process, see Garsoïan, "Byzantine Annexation;" Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 124–26.

We should also recall that the Vita Basilii, written in the mid-tenth century, proclaimed that Basil I, founder of the Macedonian dynasty and ancestor of Basil II, was ethnically Armenian from the line of the royal Arsacid house.¹¹⁴ It further claimed that he was fulfilling the vision of Sahak from Łazar P'arpec'i's History, which predicted the future restoration of the Armenian kingdom by a member of the Arsacid family.¹¹⁵ With ambitions to restore the empire to the geographical extent in the East it had attained in the late sixth and early seventh centuries,

¹¹² A valuable article by Tim Greenwood examines three such perspectives from the Armenian historical tradition, comparing the positive representation of Armenian-Byzantine engagement by the anonymous author of the History of Tarōn (written ca. 966/967–980/989) with the antagonistic representation of Byzantine-Armenian relations by the History of Uxtanēs (written in the 980s and commissioned by Anania of Narek) and the Universal History of Step'anos Tarōnec'i Asołik (completed 1004/1005). See Greenwood, "Negotiating the Roman Past."

¹¹³ See the opening of Grigor's "History of the Holy Cross of Aparank'" and his colophon to the Book of Lamentation. Both are translated in Terian, Festal Works, 223–43, 371–72.

¹¹⁴ Greenwood, "Basil I," 455–56.

¹¹⁵ Greenwood, "Basil I," 458.

such imperial propaganda was a tool in the arsenal of the Byzantine emperor, who meant to represent himself as the rightful king over the other Armenian dynasts. For the Armenian audience to whom it was directed, this indication that he issued from an Armenian royal line meant he had the legitimacy to rule. Such strategies, among other measures taken by the Byzantine emperors, facilitated their annexation of the realms of Greater Armenia in this period. The now isolated and fragmented Armenian states, realizing they could not win against the full Byzantine army, presumably determined that ceding their rule was preferable to the great loss of life that would likely have incurred in what would have probably been failed resistance anyway. Meanwhile, they were relocated to lands west (principally in Cappadocia and Sebasteia), and could take solace in the fact that their abandoned territories were to remain in Christian hands.

When the Armeno-Georgian curopalate David of Tayk' (Tao) died in 1000, he named the emperor Basil II as his heir, and the territory along with other surrounding ones was soon incorporated into the empire as the Theme of Iberia (by 1021).¹¹⁶ The historian Step'anos Tarōnec'i reports that on hearing of David of Tao's death, Basil II set out to Armenia in the year 1000. First, he granted religious concessions to the Armenian orthodox in Sebasteia, who as mentioned above had been persecuted in the 980s by the local Byzantine hierarchy there. Then, he set out through the districts of Armenia, meeting with Bagratuni and Arcruni royalty and bestowing upon them honors and gifts.¹¹⁷ As future events would make plain, this diplomatic mission paved the way for the Byzantine annexation of the Armenian realms. King Senek'erim-Yovhannēs of Vaspurakan (972 – 1021), one of the dynasts with whom Basil II had met, did just ¹¹⁶ Garsoïan, "Byzantine Annexation," 189; Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 124.

¹¹⁷ Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.43, MH 15:822–24. See Greenwood, "Negotiating the Roman Past," 146.

that in 1021. Senek' erim-Yovhannēs, whose rule in Vaspurakan was precarious since he was a usurper of the throne and since the realm was also subject to plundering raids of Turkmen groups, agreed to terms by which the empire took control of Vaspurakan and in exchange, Senek' erim-Yovhannēs received a vast domain in Sebasteia, where he moved along with his family, court, high-ranking clergy and some 14,000 retainers.¹¹⁸ Many of the monks of Narek also relocated and founded a new, relocated Narekavank' (later Arekavank') in Cappadocia, with some traditions claiming that they took the remains of Grigor with them.¹¹⁹ Vaspurakan was then transformed into a Byzantine theme.¹²⁰ Later, the Bagratid kingdoms of Ani and Kars were ceded to the empire in 1045 and 1064 respectively, and their dynasts were also transferred west to Cappadocia and given domains there.¹²¹

The Byzantine Empire held these territories for only a couple of decades, since they were soon all lost to the Seljuks. The relocation of the local Armenian nobility out of the western portions of Greater Armenia had enormous implications for later history, as it deprived those western regions of Greater Armenia of the continuity of naxarar rule. The area eventually became dominated by various Turkmen dynasties, until their incorporation into the Ottoman Empire in the 1520s. The situation in the eastern portions of Greater Armenia, which the Byzantines never reached, was very different. There, Armenian dynasts continued into at least the fifteenth century. Meanwhile, when the Seljuks arrived all the way to Cappadocia, some of the leading families who had been resettled there relocated further south and west into Cilicia, ¹¹⁸ Garsoïan, "Byzantine Annexation," 189–90; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 116. It is interesting to note however that when he died in 1024, his body was later taken back to Vaspurakan and buried in the ancestral resting place of Arcruni dynasts at the monastery of Varag. His queen Xošuš was later buried there as well. See Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 116.

¹¹⁹ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères, no. 410, p. 76.

¹²⁰ Garsoïan, "Byzantine Annexation," 190; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 126.

¹²¹ Garsoïan, "Byzantine Annexation," 190–93; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 126.

and formed the core of the ruling élite that in time formed the kingdom of Cilicia. But that story belongs to another chapter of Armenian history.

CHAPTER 2

THE FOUNDATION OF THE MONASTERY OF NAREK IN THE CONTEXT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC BOOM AND THE AMBITIONS OF ARMENIAN DYNASTS

Շինեաց արարս բազմաձախս եւ վայելուչս,
Յետոյ վախճանեալ՝ եթող աւերակ:
Անցանեն ընդ այն մարդիկ եւ ասեն.
«Ո՞ւր արդեաւք իցեն շինողք սորա»:

*He built elegant structures at much expense,
Then after death left behind a ruin.
People pass one of them by and say,
“Where could those who built and enjoyed this now be?”*

— Anania of Narek, “On this Transitory World”

The two hundred years between the mid-ninth to mid-eleventh centuries marks itself out as one of the major periods of building activity in Armenian history. Bearing witness to this fecund activity of construction are some of the structures, which, erected in this period, stand to the present day. Coming readily to mind are such striking examples as the monasteries of Sanahin and Halbat in the Lori province and Tat‘ew in the Siwnik‘ province of the Republic of Armenia, the Church of the Holy Cross on Alt‘amar Island in Lake Van, and the many skeletal-like structures in the now deserted city of Ani, located near the northeastern border of the Republic of Turkey, which, despite their largely destroyed condition, still manage to enthrall contemporary visitors, prompting them to imagine the splendor of the lost civilization that once peopled them.

Thanks to a booming regional economy and, especially, Armenia’s role in the facilitation of international trade between Byzantium and the caliphate, considerable wealth was accrued by the major Armenian dynasts of the period, the Bagratuni, Arcruni, and Siwni. One of the principal — and certainly one of the most temporally enduring — ends to which they directed their accrued wealth was construction projects. These ranged from fortresses and palaces to city infrastructure and development to churches and monastic foundations. As part of this broader building activity, Narek monastery (Narekavank)¹ was founded in the 930s–940s as a spiritual and intellectual center near the twin Arcruni capitals of Ostan and Alt‘amar at the apogee of Arcruni power. The vardapets Anania and Petros were invited to lead the direction of the monastery, the former known for his musical abilities and as a great scholar and philosopher (in the monastic sense) and the latter as a skilled Scriptural exegete and commentator.² Anania became the monastery’s first abbot, and over the next half century under his leadership, Narek developed a reputation as a vibrant center of liturgical performance, ascetic-mystical spirituality, and as a center of learning.

In order to properly contextualize the foundation of Narekavank and understand its significance as part of the larger Arcruni project in Vaspurakan, especially during the reign of Gagik I (prince, 903/4 – 908; king 908 – ca. 943/4), in this chapter I will highlight some of the main elements of the larger boom in the Islamicate economy into which Armenia was integrated, the many building projects which came about as a result, with particular attention to the cenobitic monastic foundations of which Narek is an example, and their interrelation with the power politics at play between the major Armenian dynastic families of the era.

¹ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 544, p. 98.

² Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:751.27; 51–52, tr. Greenwood, Universal History, 225, 229.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC BOOM

It has been argued that the Umayyad Caliphate had an unhealthy reliance on income generated from the spoils of conquest and military expansion, as opposed to a more sustainable source of income, namely, one generated from a robust system of provincial taxation, and that this weakness in their state economy contributed to their premature downfall in the mid-eighth century.³ The Arab conquerors had no prior experience of large imperial government, and therefore it is not surprising that this aspect of their state was underdeveloped. By contrast, the organization and structure of the ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate that took over from 750 onwards fit into the typical pattern of land-based tributary empires that have successfully exerted hegemony over vast portions of the Eurasian landmass beginning with the Akkadian Empire ca. 2300 BC and continuing down into the modern era.⁴ The ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate, which drew upon memories of Sasanian administrative structures, was “based on the conquest of wide agrarian domains and the taxation of peasant surplus production”⁵ and operated by redistributing the vast and diverse resources of its provinces via the administering hub of the caliphal center.⁶

Economic historians of the caliphate have identified the period between ca. 750–1100 as one of extended economic growth and expansion.⁷ Summarizing the results of scholarship on the early Islamic economy in comparison to the period of late antiquity that preceded it, Michael Morony writes that early Islam “saw more intensive and extensive exploitation of mineral and water resources, of land for agriculture and domestic animals, and of animal and human labor,

³ Blankinship, The End of the Jihād State; Bonner, “In Search of the Early Islamic Economy,” 21–22.

⁴ Bang and Bayly, Tributary Empires; Bonner, “In Search of the Early Islamic Economy,” 20.

⁵ Bang and Bayly, “Tributary Empires,” 6.

⁶ On redistribution, its relation to a society’s economy, and the dependence upon it in premodern western societies, see Polanyi, The Great Transformation, 50–58; on its application to the Islamic Caliphate, see Bonner, “In Search of the Early Islamic Economy,” 20.

⁷ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth.”

increased specialization in manufacturing and services, and a greater commercialization of production.”⁸

The caliphal North was no exception to this larger, regional trend. The second half of the ninth to the end of the tenth century has been described as “one of the most splendid periods of cultural and economic flourishing in medieval Armenian history.”⁹ This is in stark contrast to the situation of the period preceding it in the eighth century, which was marked by near constant Arab-Byzantine warfare and a series of revolts by the Armenian naxarars, which were met with increasingly punitive measures by the caliphal armies. Obviously, this had deleterious effects on the Armenian population and economy, since, in addition to the retributive measures and heavy taxation of Armenia in the eighth century, there was also the discontinuance of the international overland trade route through Armenia to the Black Sea ports in Byzantium.¹⁰

As far as Armenia was concerned, the situation changed for the better in the second half of the ninth century. The two most important factors seem to have been lower taxation and increased trade. The first factor was related to the increased autonomy of the Armenian dynasts and the implications this autonomy had for taxation. One of the main prerogatives gained by Ašot I Bagratuni in the 860s was the right to collect taxes in his own realm and send them directly to the caliph. This meant that he could benefit economically from the tax collection, rather than the proceeds from tax collection going only to the caliph and his tax representative in the North. There is also indication that the amount of taxes sent to the caliph may have decreased in the ninth and tenth centuries, and this despite the fact that there was increased wealth being produced. The second main factor was the reopening of the international overland trade routes running through Armenia, thanks to which the Armenian dynasts could profit due to their facilitation of international trade and the other benefits this brought, such as the collection of toll and transit fees and income from urban centers that were built up to support the activity along the trade route.

⁸ Morony, “Early Islamic Mining Boom,” 166.

⁹ Pogossian, “Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan,” 181.

¹⁰ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 129–33.

Let us now turn in more detail both to these principal factors and some of the other areas in which Armenia developed economically as a result of keeping step with and benefitting from broader regional development, all of which then contributed to the vast amounts of disposable wealth available to the dynasts of the period, some of which they funneled into the building projects that mark the age.

Taxation

As mentioned above, the early Umayyad Caliphate derived much of its income from spoils and booty taken in war. The beginning of a more stable and sophisticated administrative system involving provincial taxation and resource redistribution began with the Marwānid reforms in the late seventh/early eighth century and continued into the ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate.¹¹ It is also during this period that Armenia became more directly tied to the caliphate with the creation of the province of Armīniya to administer the caliphal North, which entailed more centralized control over the new province, including regular collection of taxes.¹²

¹¹ On the Marwānid reforms and the beginnings of more centralized administration in the caliphate, see Kennedy, Prophet and the Age, 99–103; Robinson, “The rise of Islam,” 215–21.

¹² In the early Umayyad period, Armenian tribute in cash was often waived in return for military service. See Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 186–200.

Due to a lack of data or conflicting data, it is impossible to reconstruct the exact amount of tax collected from Armīniya over individual years. Nevertheless, a general picture can be formed. Extant tax lists reveal the vast fiscal and material resources at the disposal of the early ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate.¹³ The majority of taxes were collected in cash rather than in kind and financial institutions and innovative methods for long distance currency exchange such as suftājas — checks to be cashed in banks located in both the capital and throughout the provinces — developed in order to ensure the safe transfer of large sums of money.¹⁴ As discussed in the previous chapter, from the early eighth through the second half of the ninth century, there was a series of Armenian revolts against the centralized administration of the caliphate in the North that were often prompted by what was perceived by the Armenian nobility as unfair levels of taxation. Complaints about high taxation are a regular occurrence both in the histories of the period, principally that of Łewond, as well as in popular tales such as the oral epic Sasna crer (The Daredevils of Sasun), which has its origins in this period.¹⁵

Total caliphal revenues seem to have reached a peak in the second half of the eighth and first half of the ninth centuries, and then declined in the second half of the ninth and into the tenth centuries.¹⁶ The decline in revenue has been explained as owing to a gradual collapse of the centralized caliphal system of public taxation.¹⁷ The disintegration of the caliphate seems directly tied to economic collapse at the center and the inability of caliphs to fund the military and their luxurious lifestyle.¹⁸ As taxation became privatized and provincial leaders began to

¹³ Ibn Khaldūn, Muqaddima, 1:362–63. See Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 147–48.

¹⁴ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 170.

¹⁵ Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 180–82; Cowe, “Relations Between the Kingdoms,” 77–78.

¹⁶ Waines, “Third Century Internal Crisis,” 284.

¹⁷ Kennedy, “The Middle East,” 400–01.

¹⁸ Kennedy, “The Middle East,” 400–01; idem, Prophet and the Age, 187–95, 203; Waines, “Third Century Internal Crisis,” 282–87.

exercise more autonomy, they withheld larger amounts of cash and as a result were able to increase their own wealth to the detriment of the center.¹⁹ This seems also to have been the case during the period of the locally autonomous Armenian dynasties, although there is frustratingly little reliable evidence concerning the amounts of tax paid to the caliphal center by Armenian dynasts during the second half of the ninth and the tenth centuries (or in general during the period of the ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate).²⁰

One recalls that it was the Armenian refusal to allow the ostikan to collect the annual tribute in 850 that was the immediate precursor to the military campaigns of Bughā al-Kabīr in Armenia. This does not mean, of course, that taxes were not paid that year. The “prince of princes” Bagarat Bagratuni sent an embassy to the ostikan with gifts and the tribute that he had collected. The critical issue was that he refused to allow the ostikan himself or his tax collectors to enter the country in order to collect taxes.²¹ Thus, it was a dispute regarding territory and jurisdiction over taxation rather than the payment of taxation in and of itself. The leading Bagratuni prince wanted to secure the right to oversee taxes himself, by which he might be able to profit from tax collection as opposed to the ostikan. One of the principal rights granted to Ašot in 862, as noted by the historian Yovhannēs Draxanakertc‘i, was to collect the taxes of Armenia and send the royal tribute directly to the caliph without going through the intermediary of the ostikan.²² It seems that subsequent dynasts were able to maintain this prerogative throughout the tenth century. In the early tenth century, when Gagik I Arcruni broke faith with his Bagratid ¹⁹ Waines, “Third Century Internal Crisis,” 285. Waines gives the example of the Ṭulūnids in Egypt and the Sāmānids in Khurāsān.

²⁰ Vacca, Non-Muslim Provinces, 200–03.

²¹ Garsoīan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 140.

²² Garsoīan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 147.

liege lord and established the kingdom of Vaspurakan where Narekavank⁶ was to be built a few decades later, he likewise would have controlled taxation in his own realm.

As time went on and the grip of the caliphal center weakened over the provinces, it is likely that the Bagratuni, Arcruni, and Siwni dynasts were sending less tribute to the center than had been the case in the previous period and thereby keeping more profits for themselves, which would be in line with trends observable across the caliphate in this period. It is difficult to otherwise give an adequate account for the vast amount of wealth at their disposal in the tenth century. One seems obliged to conclude not only that they were both generating more income through the facilitation of international trade (on which, see below) but that they were also sending less in tribute to the caliphal center.

Trade

The period between 700–1000 saw increased trade between the caliphate and neighboring lands, including the Khazars, Rus, Eastern Romans (Byzantines), Bulgars, Scandinavian Norsemen (Vikings), and others.²³ The activity is illustrated by the finds of Islamic silver²⁴ and by a detailed list compiled by the tenth-century geographer al-Muqaddasī of items produced and exported from the cities and towns of Khurāsān-Transoxiana.²⁵ The cities and trading posts founded throughout the Islamicate world in this period to facilitate international trade reveal that the trading networks and the spatial integration they fostered were more typically overland than maritime.²⁶ However, merchants also made use of networks along the Mediterranean for ²³ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 162, 173–74.

²⁴ Milwright, “Archaeology and Material Culture,” 681; Kovalev, “Mint Output.”

²⁵ For a translation of this list, see Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 166.

²⁶ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 167–69.

interchange with Europe and North Africa and those issuing from the Persian Gulf to engage in trade as far East as Sri Lanka and Thailand, as revealed, for example, by the archaeological record for eighth- to tenth-century Iraqi glazed pottery.²⁷

The increased participation in international trade in this period by Armenian merchants has long been recognized as an important source of income for the naxarar dynasts of the age. The fact that most trade was conducted overland was of benefit to the Armenian rulers, since Armenia had no direct access to major sea networks of the time. One of the most important trade routes from the Armenian perspective was one running from Dabīl/Duin (the former Arsacid capital and residence of the ostikan) to Trebizond on the southeastern Black Sea coast, by means of which commerce between the East Roman Empire and the caliphate was conducted to the profit of Bagratid Armenia, which acted as an important intermediary zone through which trade between the two hostile polities could take place, and in so doing profited from tariffs and other sources of income associated with the increased traffic.²⁸ New cities, a result of the increased trade activity, were founded or expanded along this trade route, in particular Kars, Aren, and Ani. Ani is an illustrative example of the kind of rapid development new cities underwent in the period. Naturally fortified on three sides, it began as a Kamsarakan fortress that housed the family treasury. As international trade picked up, it became a key node on the trade route, and this catalyzed its transformation from a stronghold at the beginning of Bagratid rule into a city and then eventually into the Bagratid permanent royal residence and capital in the late tenth century. From there, its position on the trade route facilitated its development into one of the ²⁷ Milwright, "Archaeology and Material Culture," 678–81.

²⁸ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 136–50; Garsoïan, "Independent Kingdoms," 183. For more on the trade routes in this period, including maps and the major cities involved, see Manandian, Trade and Cities, 155–72.

most cosmopolitan and populated cities in the Near East in the late tenth and early eleventh century.²⁹ Duin also connected with Gelakunik' around Lake Sewan en route to Partaw, Ganja and north to Tbilisi. By means of this route, Bagratid Armenia facilitated trade to Iberia, Abkhazia, and other Northern realms.³⁰

Other important nodes and offshoots from this main route included Naxiĵewan and Xoy, which connected with a southern route through Arcruni Vaspurakan and into the neighboring emirates to the west. Some of the important commercial cities along this route were Van, Ostan (Gagik's capital nearby which Narek monastery was built), Berkri, Arĉes, Xlat', and Baĉes around Lake Van, and on to Manazkert, Arzan, Miyafarkin, Amida, Karin, Erzinka, and west as far as Sebasteia.³¹ Thus, both the Bagratid and Arcruni kings increased their wealth in this period largely as a result of their realm's continued integration into the caliphal economy and the profit gained from their realms' role in facilitating international trade between the caliphate and neighboring peoples.

Urbanization

In general, this period is marked by the foundation of new cities and increased urbanization. Cities developed in tandem with the increase in international trade, since they were nodes on the overland mercantile networks.³² While agricultural labor remained the norm in rural areas, a skilled workforce developed in cities.³³ The Islamic world was ahead of the hemispheric norms of the day. A quantitative study of comparative urban development in Europe

²⁹ See, as a starting point, Cowe, Ani.

³⁰ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 146.

³¹ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 148; 155. Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 81, p. 106; map 87, p. 111.

³² Denoix, "Founded Cities."

³³ Shatzmiller, "Economic Performance and Economic Growth," 159.

and the Near East from 800–1800 has estimated that by the tenth century, the urbanization rate in the Islamic world was between 7–8 percent, whereas in Europe it was only between 4–5 percent.³⁴ By the year 1000, estimates for the total urban population in cities in the Islamic world range upwards of 10 million, with about forty to fifty cities with populations greater than 20,000, six to eight of which had over 100,000.³⁵ This was something like double the total population of the cities of Europe at the time, which was 5–6 million, despite the fact that Europe may have had more total population at the time than the Islamic world.³⁶

The situation in Armenia aligned with these macro developments. Being on trade routes, city infrastructure was built up to provide services such as hostels, inns, and markets for merchants. As would be expected, Armenian cities resembled the structure and internal organization of other cities in the Islamic world, many of them being founded or developed in territory controlled by the emirates. This has led scholars to associate Armenian urbanization directly with the greater integration of Armenians into the caliphal world beginning with the settling of Arab emirates in Armenia in the late eighth century.³⁷ The traditional environment of naxarar society was mountain fastnesses and agricultural domains. The naxarar lords of the previous era did not build cities — nor were Armenians significantly involved in trade — preferring instead the safety and isolation of their fortified castles in the highlands. This gradually began to change in this period as both Bagratid and Arçrunid dynasts engaged directly in the development of cities and urban infrastructure. The founding and development of cities in ³⁴ Bosker, Buringh, and van Zanden, “From Baghdad to London,” 1424.

³⁵ Bosker, Buringh, and van Zanden, “From Baghdad to London,” 1424; Bairoch, Cities and Economic Development, 374–75; Shatzmiller, “Recent trends (part two).”

³⁶ Bosker, Buringh, and van Zanden, “From Baghdad to London,” 1424; Bairoch, Cities and Economic Development, 374–75; Shatzmiller, “Recent trends (part two).”

³⁷ Raymond, “Spatial Organization;” Manandian, Trade and Cities, 148–50, 154–55; Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 81–82; Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 181.

the emirates and subsequently in the Bagratuni, Arcruni, and Siwni principalities naturally had a marked impact on Armenian society. Due to their capacity as nodes on international trade routes, cities such as Naxijewan, Duin, Arčeš, Karin, Arcn, Kars, and Ani became hubs of interchange for the movement of people and objects. This naturally led to the influx of new ideas and new socioeconomic actors. It is no surprise then that the period is also marked by an unstable social order, some aspects of which will be examined in the fourth chapter.

Division of Labor, Manufacturing, Artisanal Crafts, and Merchants

The Islamicate economy in this period was also marked by a high degree of division of labor within manufacturing, which led to higher quality items being produced at increased capacity and with heightened efficiency.³⁸ Similar developments occurred in the service sector.³⁹ By analyzing trade names as an indication of division of labor, a quantitative study revealed 418 separate occupations in the manufacturing industries and 522 in the service industries, very high numbers, comparatively speaking, for premodern economies, and a strong indication of a flourishing economy.⁴⁰

While the traditional Armenian social class divisions with their prescribed labor roles persisted into this period, new opportunities presented themselves for laypersons as a result of trade and urban development, and the period marks the beginning of both an artisanal and merchant middle class in Armenian society.⁴¹ As mentioned above, Armenians began to engage ³⁸ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 157; eadem, Labour in the Medieval Islamic World, 11–99.

³⁹ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 157–58.

⁴⁰ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 158.

⁴¹ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 148. Traditional Armenian society was tripartite, the highest class being comprised of the naxarars or išxans, followed by the lower nobility of azats and the hierarchy of the clergy in the Christian period. The great majority fell into the lowest, taxable class of ramiks or šinakans. These classes still remained more in crafts, and artisanal guilds were formed in urban environments.⁴² More trade meant more cities and increased urban development meant more of the local population participating in crafts. Some of Anania's works, in particular the metaphors he draws on in his ascetical instructions (xratk) in order to illustrate his ethical teaching, seem to attest to the increased engagement in urban, artisanal crafts in the Armenian sphere.⁴³ This is also evidenced by the archaeological remains of sites that have been excavated, such as Ani.⁴⁴ Following trends observable across the Islamicate world, the archaeological record in Armenia attests to the increasing specialization in trades and labor in the manufacturing industry in this period. Archaeological digs have uncovered items produced by potters, smiths, armorers, jewelers, and weavers, among other craftsmen.⁴⁵ In Armenia, increased specialization is perhaps most observable in the textile industry, which was particularly well developed. Inhabitants of Armīniya are singled out in Arab sources as skilled makers of rugs and carpets, belts, turbans, covers, pillow cases, cushions, saddle blankets, curtains, and cloth for sofas, the most high quality items employing both silk and wool.⁴⁶ Increased Armenian participation in trade begins in this period and is an occupation that would become more prevalent in centuries to come.⁴⁷ New opportunities such as these must have had a significant impact on the mentality of laypersons and relates to the social and religious populist movements associated with the era, a subject that will be taken up in more detail in the next chapter.

during the period in question, even as new opportunities began to present themselves in the arenas of craft and trade. See Garsoïan, "Independent Kingdoms," 176.

⁴² Garsoïan, "Independent Kingdoms," 182.

⁴³ See Cowe, "Renewal of the Debate."

⁴⁴ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 151–52.

⁴⁵ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 151–52.

⁴⁶ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 152–53; Garsoïan, "Independent Kingdoms," 183–84; Der Manuelian, Eiland, and Sano, Weavers, Merchants, and Kings.

⁴⁷ On the later phase, in the early modern period, see Aslanian, From the Indian Ocean to the Mediterranean.

Literacy and Training

Towards the end of the period, there was a significant increase in literacy and education across all sectors of society in the caliphate, in both Arabic and gradually in New Persian.⁴⁸ While training in the workforce had long been based on oral transmission from master to apprentice, the latter end of the period in question is marked by the appearance of technical manuals for all sorts of trades, crafts, and skills.⁴⁹ These manuals emerged in the diverse social and intellectual milieux of society. They include first of all the adāb model, covering the administrative bureaucracy of the ‘Abbāsīd court but also extending to manuals on such diverse topics as calligraphy, Qur’ānic recitation, as well as manuals relating to administration of the caliphate’s finances, monies, and tax systems.⁵⁰ Secondly, manuals were composed in the legal and religious milieux by qāḍīs, notaries, muḥtasibs, and others.⁵¹ Thirdly, the composition of technical manuals emerged in the manufacturing trades as well, at least one manual extant — and sometimes several — from nearly every known trade from the period, from bookbinding and ink-making to minting, construction, soap-making, cooking, and many others.⁵²

Armenian society was traditionally oral, the alphabet and writing being invented as tools in the service of evangelization and Christianization in the early fifth century.⁵³ During the period in question, writing remained by and large restricted to the religious class. Nevertheless, literacy seems also to have been making inroads among other spheres of society towards the end ⁴⁸ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 158–59.

⁴⁹ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 159.

⁵⁰ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 159.

⁵¹ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 159.

⁵² Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 159–60; eadem, Labour in the Medieval Islamic World, 200–54.

⁵³ Russell, “On the Origin and Invention;” idem, “Alphabets.”

of this period and into the following. In the late Bagratid and early Cilician period, new genres developed in Armenia in the lay sphere in a literary form of the vernacular known as middle Armenian. The first medical handbook (bžškaran) was written during the reign of Gagik I Bagratuni (r. 989/90 – 1017/20) and the genre developed further in the Cilician period, especially thanks to Mxit‘ar Herac‘i.⁵⁴ The development of state administration, secular bureaucracies, and the beginning of written lawcodes beyond the customary, oral law of the naxarar lords is also associated with the later Bagratid period and like the medicine genre was carried over and developed further in the Armenian kingdom of Cilicia.⁵⁵ This attests to a slow and gradual trend toward increased literacy in the lay professional fields.⁵⁶ Unfortunately, very little written material survives from these spheres. Most manuscripts were preserved in monastic scriptoria and for centuries Armenians lacked a state and civil bureaucracy for the preservation of non-religious texts, which meant that there has been a marked bias in the preservation of religious texts to the present day. Thus, one is left mostly to wonder at what might have been contained in the royal library at Ani, for example.

Among segments of Armenian society, there was also a knowledge of Arabic and Greek, and often Armenians made free use of manuals in these languages instead of composing their own. For example, an Armenian version of the Greek Geoponica, a technical work on agriculture in its various aspects known in Armenian as the Girk‘ Vastakoc‘, was not made until the thirteenth century from an Arabic intermediary. But it has been suggested that during this period, Armenians may have had knowledge of and been making use of the Greek version (either the later Greek version composed in this period or an earlier version from the sixth century).⁵⁷

⁵⁴ Vardanyan, “Medicine in Armenia, 190–91.

⁵⁵ Langlois, Le trésor.

⁵⁶ Cowe, “Medieval Armenian Literary and Cultural Trends.”

Scribal and book arts were naturally well developed in Armenia. Recipes pertaining to inkmaking, pigments, paper polishing, and related activity survive in Armenian manuscripts, and Armenians developed a unique tradition of bookbinding.⁵⁸

The creation of new textbooks for the teaching curriculum of the monastic academies founded in this period also relates to the increased literacy of the period. Narek was perhaps the first of the great medieval monastic academies and Anania's Book of Instruction can be understood as an introductory manual for young monks. Traces of the spoken vernacular and a trend towards what would become the grammatical norms of middle Armenian are discernible in the language and style of his instructions. Written in his capacity as abbot of Narek monastery and treating a range of topics, including humility, patience and peace, prayer, the transience of earthly life, caution for thoughts, spiritual mourning with tears, and counsel for priests, it seems likely that it was written as a guide for regulating life among monks living together in the hundreds in the new, large cenobitic complexes that began to appear in Armenia at this time. While much monastic teaching would have been conducted orally, Anania's written xratk ' may have circulated among abbots and monastic teachers to serve as a basis for oral teaching. The new conditions of large-scale cenobitic life called for new instructional material and topics, and Anania gives a great deal of attention to promoting harmonious, communal living, a crucial area of concern considering the large number of monks settled at many of the new monasteries. In line with the philosophical tradition of late antiquity, he understood the cultivation of any virtue or ascetic exercise to be similar to the process of learning a secular craft, trade, or art (արուեստ)

⁵⁷ Greppin, "The Armenians and the Greek Geoponica," 48–49.

⁵⁸ Abrahamyan, Hayots' gir ev grch'ut'yun, 280–90; Merian, "The Structure of Armenian Bookbinding."

and as mentioned above employs metaphors from the artisanal word to advance his ascetic teaching. Anania's ethical and ascetic instruction will be the topic of the next chapter.

Agricultural Innovation

In addition to urbanization and the development of artisanal crafts, innovation in the agricultural sphere is also a notable feature of this period.⁵⁹ This entailed not only the introduction of new food crops but also development in the means of cultivation as well as new principles of land tenure and human relations that led to increased efficiency and output in agricultural production.⁶⁰ Arab geographers and historians attest to the importance of Armenian forests as sources of timber, and also the export of nuts, including walnuts, almonds, and filberts.⁶¹ In terms of fauna, horses and mules were also exported from Armenia, as were falcons.⁶² In the arena of agricultural production and foodstuffs, Armenia is noted in Arab sources as an important source of wheat and fish, especially the tarex from Lake Van.⁶³ While the harvesting of most of these resources was not new in the period in question, the scale of their exploitation was. Additionally, the fact that certain items, such as wheat and fish, were exported in large quantities demonstrates how the local, traditionally agricultural economy of Armenia had begun to be integrated into the wider network of international commerce.⁶⁴ This would likely have increased profited for the naxarar dynasts, in whose hands the bulk of the rural lands remained.

⁵⁹ Watson, Agricultural Innovation.

⁶⁰ Watson, Agricultural Innovation.

⁶¹ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 150–51; Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 183.

⁶² Manandian, Trade and Cities, 150–51.

⁶³ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 150–51; Garsoïan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 183.

⁶⁴ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 150.

Mining, Minting, and Monetization

Certain sites for the mining of metallic ore in the caliphal lands were naturally inherited from the East Roman and Sasanian empires of late antiquity, but new sites were also discovered and old ones expanded, leading to a substantial increase in the output of gold, silver, copper, iron, and lead.⁶⁵ The development of new techniques and technologies of extraction led to the exploitation of more — and previously unexploitable — resources.⁶⁶ In addition to the aforementioned, there was also increased extraction of mercury, zinc, tin, precious and semi-precious gems, ochres, natron, sal ammoniac, alum, and salt, as well as coral and pearls harvested from the sea, to name only the most important items.⁶⁷ The peak of production for the mining and extraction of most resources occurred in the ninth and tenth centuries, the period most relevant to the present study.⁶⁸

The increase in mining led naturally to an increase in the minting of coins and thus monetization of the economy.⁶⁹ One way this can tangibly be seen is by the examination of dirham (silver coin) hoards, which show a marked increase from the eighth century to the tenth, until they begin to dramatically fall as a result of the so-called ‘silver famine’ in the eleventh century.⁷⁰ Another piece of evidence for monetization of the economy are tax lists preserved by Arab historians and geographers. While in the early years of caliphal rule, wages were often paid ⁶⁵ Morony, “Early Islamic Mining Boom,” 172–210.

⁶⁶ Morony, “Early Islamic Mining Boom,” 212–13.

⁶⁷ Morony, “Early Islamic Mining Boom,” 210–11.

⁶⁸ Morony, “Early Islamic Mining Boom,” 212.

⁶⁹ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 144–49.

⁷⁰ Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 144–46; Kovalev and Kaelin, “Circulation of Arab Silver.”

— and taxes collected — in kind in rural areas, as time went on there was a discernible trend towards payments being made and taxes collected increasingly in cash.⁷¹

Since late antiquity, Armenia had been a contested site of mining between the East Romans and Sasanians, and in the Islamic period it served as a source of gold, silver, iron, copper, lead, borax, red and yellow arsenic, mountain resin, mercury, salt, and mineral, animal, and vegetable dyes, especially cobalt blue and ordan karmir (a red cochineal dye).⁷² The mining of ore also led to the establishment of mints in Armenian lands. However, these mints were not established in Armenian-ruled territory. The principal mints, which predated the creation of the Armenian monarchies, were generally located at the capitals of the caliphal administrative provinces and under the control of the caliphal governors residing there: Dabīl/Duin (Arminiya), Bardh'a/Partaw (Arrān, Aḥuank'), Bāb al-Abwāb/Darband (Daghastān), Shamākhiyyah (Sharwān), and Hārūnābād/al-Hārūniyyah/Ma'din Bājunays/Muḥammadiyyah (Bājunays/Apahunik').⁷³ Minting coins remained the prerogative of the caliphal governors. The number of coins found in the North from the eighth to eleventh centuries parallel the finds in other regions, indicating that there was an increased coin supply as time went on until a peak in the tenth century, whence begins a decline thereafter, corresponding with the Byzantine expansion into Armenia and then the Seljuk invasions in the eleventh century.⁷⁴ The

⁷¹ Shatzmiller, "Economic Performance and Economic Growth," 146.

⁷² Morony, "Early Islamic Mining Boom," 172, 210; Manandian, Trade and Cities, 151–53; Garsoïan, "Independent Kingdoms," 183.

⁷³ Bates, "Dirham Mint of the Northern Provinces;" idem, "A Second Muḥammadiyya;" Vardanyan, "The Administration of the 'Abbāsīd North." The Bagratuni and Arcruni kings did not mint their own coins, presumably because they were not granted the right to do so. The sole exception was the lesser Bagratid kingdom of Tašir-Joraget. See Grierson, "Kiurikē I or Kiurikē II;" Hovhannisyān, "Hayagir arājin dramnerē." It was also not in their interest to mint their own coins, as the Islamic world followed the silver dirham.

⁷⁴ Shatzmiller, "Economic Performance and Economic Growth," 144–46; Kovalev and Kaelin, "Circulation of Arab Silver."

monetization of the economy and an increased wealth disparity between rich and poor also seems to have made an impact on some of the religious and populist movements that will be the subject of the fourth chapter.

The Economy and Building Projects

As historian Hugh Kennedy notes, although the ninth to tenth centuries are marked by centrifugal tendencies observable across the caliphate and general political fragmentation, socially and economically the Muslim world maintained a unity.⁷⁵ As this review of various aspects of the caliphal economy between 700–1100 has shown, political crisis at the center and the fragmentation of the caliphate did not have a disruptive effect on the general economic expansion of the period. The economy maintained its stability regardless of internal administration. The local Armenian dynasts supported the transit trade because of the advantages it brought them. Rather than primarily funneled to the center, wealth seems to have been diffused more evenly across the various realms of the Islamicate world and thus available in increased measure to local rulers in the various polities that made up the Islamicate lands. It is in this politically centrifugal and economically booming context that the Armenian dynasts undertook the great civil and religious building projects that mark out this period.

One striking indication of the way in which the trends in (religious) building projects of Armenian dynasts closely followed the trends of the wider Islamicate economy is found by a quantitative comparison of monastic foundations with the number of coins in circulation. By far the largest number of Islamic coins found in hoards in Armenia and the larger Caucasus region date to the tenth century and the same holds true for hoards found in Europe, the Near East, North Africa, and Central Asia.⁷⁶ Likewise, by examining the foundation date of the approximately 200 hundred monastic institutions that can be firmly established as having predated the Battle of Manazkert (1071), the period between the late ninth to eleventh century stands out from previous centuries. After a review of the relevant data, Sergio La Porta noted that intense building activity “began at the end of the ninth, climaxed during the tenth, and then slowed down slightly during the eleventh. The majority of monasteries known to have been established during the pre-Seljuk era date from this period.”⁷⁷ This corresponds almost precisely to the number of datable Islamic coins in the same period as well as the period of the autonomous kingdoms of Bagratid Armenia, Vaspurakan, and later the kingdoms in Siwnik’, attesting to the fact that rulers in this period had the most disposable wealth at this time with which to engage in building and other public works projects.⁷⁸ In Armenia, greater wealth at the disposal of the local dynasts is also well evidenced in the archaeological record by the great civil and religious building projects that define the period, many of which survive to the present day.

⁷⁵ Kennedy, Prophet and the Age, 203.

THE BUILDING ACTIVITY OF ARMENIAN DYNASTS AMID INTERNAL COMPETITION

We may now turn to the building activity of the Armenian dynasts. These include fortified castles and palaces as centers for governing, such as Bagratid Ani and Arcrunid Ostan and Alt’amar among others, with large hunting preserves to facilitate the favored pastime of royal figures of the region. The dynasts also developed and renovated the civic infrastructure in their realms, including roads, bridges, hostels and caravansaries, as well as urban infrastructure in order to support and capitalize on the rise in overland trade and the growing productive powers in the realms of labor and industry.⁷⁹ The uptick in religious building projects, especially monastic churches and foundations, in this period was part of this wider trend in building activity. Several studies have been devoted to the dynasts' patronage of religious building projects as a way of both bolstering their image and prestige in the eyes of the spiritual (i.e., ascetic/monastic) and religious (i.e., ecclesiastical hierarchy) elite and the local population, and demonstrating their power and wealth as they vied with one another for glory and preeminence.⁸⁰ Monastic churches also often served as the family mausoleums for naxarar houses, such as the Monastery of the Holy Cross in Ałbag for the Arcruni.⁸¹ They also served a legal function, securing family property and domains by means of endowments.⁸² Several studies have also been devoted to a detailed examination of individual monasteries or churches founded in this period.⁸³ While making use of this previous scholarship, my focus will naturally fall on Arcruni Vaspurakan, especially under Gagik I, in order to provide a contextual backdrop to the founding of Narek monastery and Anania's appointment there as abbot.

⁷⁶ Kovalev and Kaelin, “Circulation of Arab Silver;” Shatzmiller, “Economic Performance and Economic Growth,” 145.

⁷⁷ La Porta, Review of Répertoire, 160.

⁷⁸ La Porta, Review of Répertoire, 160.

The building projects undertaken by Arcruni rulers from the second half of the ninth to the first half of the tenth century were tied to their expansion across Vaspurakan and their aim to establish their control and mark their newly won territory as their own, as well as — particularly ⁷⁹ Manandian, Trade and Cities, 140.

⁸⁰ See Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan;" eadem, "Locating Religion, Controlling Territory;" eadem, "Relics, Rulers, Patronage;" Jones, Between Islam and Byzantium, 97–123; Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 8–33; Donabédian, "La renaissance de l'architecture."

⁸¹ For this and other examples, see Greenwood, "Corpus of Early Medieval Armenian Inscriptions," 58–59.

⁸² For examples, see Greenwood, "Historical Tradition, Memory and Law," 43–44.

⁸³ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan;" Vardanyan, Hořomos Monastery; Pogossian and Vardanyan, The Church of the Holy Cross of Alt'amar; Der Nersessian, Aght'amar; Jones, Between Islam and Byzantium; Mnats'akanyan, Aght'amar. See also several volumes in the series Documenti di Architettura Armena/Documents of Armenian Architecture.

in the case of Gagik — compete for regional prestige with the Bagratuni kings to the North.⁸⁴

This process culminated in Gagik's usurpation from the Bagratunis of the position of preeminent king of Armenia in popular perception. While he never underwent a formal coronation ceremony, he compensated for that fact by successfully orchestrating the relocation of political, ecclesiastical, and spiritual power around his person and domain, centered at his palatial residences of Ostan and Alt'amar in Vaspurakan, which he seems able to have maintained until the end of his life in the early 940s.

From Apostasy to Pious Patronage: Arcruni Expansion Across Vaspurakan

The Arcruni expansion across Vaspurakan and their building projects and patronage of religious foundations and relics was memorialized in an Arcruni-sponsored history known as the History of the House of the Arcrunik' by T'ovma Arcruni and his Anonymous Continuator.⁸⁵

The core of the text provides an account of the history of that house from mythological and prehistorical beginnings up to the late ninth and early tenth century, the period in which the bulk of it was composed.⁸⁶ T'ovma's account ends shortly after 904 — presumably he died around that year — and the anonymous continuators recapitulate some of the material covered by T'ovma and continue the story through Gagik's reign. Later additions provide material covering events as late as the thirteenth century.

⁸⁴ This process has been well studied in Pogossian, "Locating Religion, Controlling Territory."

⁸⁵ T'ovma seems to have been sponsored first by Grigor-Derenik (r. 857–868, 874–887) and then by his son Gagik, (r. prince 903/4 – 908; king 908 – ca. 943/4). See Greenwood, "Historical Tradition," 30. For the text, see T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik', MH 11:15–316, trans. Thomson.

⁸⁶ The depiction of many of the early elements in the narrative were redacted from T'ovma's perspective and therefore provide fertile ground for examining the contemporary concerns and historical memory of the ninth/tenth-century historian. See Greenwood, "Historical Tradition."

In fact, the first anonymous continuation is more properly considered a separate composition because it offers a “proximate but separate version of events to that in T‘ovma’s own composition,” while also continuing the narrative past where T‘ovma’s ended.⁸⁷ The first continuation covers the period from the birth of Gurgēn, Grigor-Derenik’s third son, in 882 and goes up until the death of Gagik in 943. It is particularly focused on praising the deeds and activities of Gagik and in so doing provides a great deal of information on his building activities, especially in Ostan and Ałt‘amar, concluding with a poetic eulogy to the recently deceased king. It has been suggested that it was likely commissioned by a relative of Gagik shortly after the latter’s death, containing as it does panegyric and eulogistic elements.⁸⁸

Two phases can be distinguished in the expansion of Arcruni influence across Vaspurakan. Phase One involves Gagik’s grandfather Ašot I ‘the Senior’ (r. prince 836 – 852, 868 – 874) and father Grigor-Derenik (r. prince 857 – 868, 874 – 887) followed by an interlude when Gagik’s older brother Ašot II ‘the Junior’ reigned (r. prince 887 – 903/4). Phase Two involves Gagik himself (r. prince, 903/4 – 908; king 908 – ca. 943/4). Phase One is marked by the bolstering of Gagik’s branch of the Arcruni family in Vaspurakan vis-à-vis other Arcruni princes and Arab emirates in the region. During the second phase, Gagik extended the position of the Arcruni dynasty to encompass all of Vaspurakan and then eclipsed the Bagratuni dynasty to the North, creating a new center of Armenian political, ecclesiastical, and spiritual power in the historic district of Rštunik‘ in the vicinity of his new twin capitals of Ostan and Ałt‘amar. There, he built palaces for himself, a stately church on the island of Ałt‘amar, established a temporary seat for the catholicos, and, as I will argue, sponsored the foundation of a new monastery, Narek, to operate as a spiritual and intellectual monastic center.

⁸⁷ Greenwood, “Historical Tradition,” 33.

⁸⁸ Greenwood, “Historical Tradition,” 33.

Along with the Āštunik', Gnunik', and Anjewac'ik', the Arcrunik' were historically one of the major naxarar houses of southern Armenia. The ancestral territory of the Arcruni clan was the province of Ałbak in southeastern Vaspurakan with their ostan (capital town, nuclear domain) at Hadamakert.⁸⁹ The traditional burial place of Arcruni princes and princesses remained into the tenth century at the monastery of the Holy Cross (S. Xaç') at Soradir.⁹⁰ The Arcruni expansion beyond their traditional domains seems to have begun in earnest in the late eighth and ninth centuries, following the Armenian rebellion of 774/5 and the devastating backlash inflicted by the caliphal forces, after which several of the major naxarar houses — such as the Āštuni, whose domains centered on the southern shore of Lake Van and included the important settlements of Ałt'amar, Van, and Ostan (their capital/nuclear domain) — were diminished or decimated.⁹¹ As mentioned in the previous chapter, other princely houses, in particular the Arcruni, as well as the newly arrived Arab settlers and emirates being established in this period, began to fill the vacuum left behind by the naxarar houses in decline. Āštunik' eventually became the center of Gagik's kingdom of Vaspurakan in the early tenth century.

⁸⁹ For a map, see Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 93, p. 117. In early Armenian authors, the term ostan, meaning 'royal domain,' was typically reserved for the royal domain of the Aršakuni kings of Armenia. In later authors such as T'ovma, it was used to refer to the capital or nuclear domain of any of the great naxarar houses. See Garsoñan, Epic Histories, 551; T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik', tr. Thomson, 183, n. 2; Hübschmann, Die altarmenischen Ortsnamen, 442, 460–61.

⁹⁰ T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik', trans. Thomson, 150, 263 n. 1, 268, 281, 291, 292. On the monastery, which was later called Črpay vank' and since the seventeenth century S. Ējmiacin, see Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 513, p. 93; idem, Monuments arméniens du Vaspurakan, 465–70.

⁹¹ Pogossian, "Locating Religion, Controlling Territory," 178; Laurent and Canard, L'Arménie entre Byzance et l'Islam, 124–25.

Another major disruptive force in the region was the punitive military campaigns of Bughā l-Kabīr in the North (851 – 852, 855 – 856), to which T‘ovma devoted considerable space in the third book of his History. In the course of these campaigns, several princes and high-profile clergy of Vaspurakan were captured and imprisoned in the caliphal capital at Sāmarrā’, among them the grandfather and father of Gagik, Ašot ‘the Senior’ and Grigor-Derenik.⁹² During their imprisonment, they were pressured to convert to Islam as a show of loyalty to the caliph. Some refused, notably Yovhannēs Bishop of Arcrunik’, an ascetic priest named Grigor, and Grigor Arcruni, who were chained in a dungeon for three years as a result of their defiance. The former two were ultimately released and hailed as confessors for enduring torture for their Christian faith, while the latter was put to death and hailed as a martyr.⁹³ In T‘ovma’s History, the perseverance of these three personages stands in vivid contrast to the capitulation of Ašot ‘the Senior’ and Grigor-Derenik. The same chapter narrates how these two, along with the majority of the other captured nobility, made a conversion to Islam, even becoming circumcised on the spot, although, as T‘ovma claims, they inwardly held onto their Christian faith and later, upon their release and return to Vaspurakan, claimed that their conversion was feigned.⁹⁴ The episode in T‘ovma’s History recalls the feigned conversion to Mazdeism of Vardan Mamikonian and his companion princes under the compulsion of Shah Yazdgard II (r. 438–457) in the mid-fifth century, as narrated in the histories by Łazar and Elišē, with which works T‘ovma was conversant.⁹⁵ Given that the sponsor of T‘ovma’s History was Grigor-Derenik (and then Gagik), ⁹² T‘ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.3 MH 11:166–67, trans. Thomson, 205–06.

⁹³ T‘ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.6 MH 11:178–85, trans. Thomson, 219–27.

⁹⁴ T‘ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.6 MH 11:181–82.27–30, trans. Thomson, 223–24.

⁹⁵ On T‘ovma’s use of these sources, see Thomson’s introduction to his translation.

one deduces that T'ovma was attempting to salvage the image of his patron's family by means of this literary allusion.

According to the military-aristocratic ethos of naxarar princes like Ašot and Grigor-Derenik, religious affiliation seems to have been of secondary importance. Political expediency sometimes necessitated making concessions on the religious plane in order to secure one's political standing. Later, one could patch up one's image with the local Armenian audience back home through patronage of relics and religious institutions and the commissioning of a History such as T'ovma's to record one's generous deeds and piety. T'ovma goes to great length to exonerate his patron and that patron's father. This seems to account both for the extended attention given to religious building projects and patronage of monasteries and relics in the text of T'ovma and his continuators as well as, more directly, for the dramatic and lengthy narrative portrayal of Ašot's death-bed confession, in which he laments and weeps over his past sins and expresses doubt that they can ever be forgiven, chief of which must, of course, have been the apostasy to Islam.⁹⁶ It reveals the Arcruni princes' effort to win back the loyalty of the ecclesiastical establishment and local population by projecting their image as defenders and sponsors of the Christian faith, in an attempt to erase their apostasy at the caliphal capital and rewrite a family tale of pious patronage.⁹⁷ Another motivation, identified by Pogossian, was their concerted effort to mark their possession and personalize their hold over their newly-won territory, especially that won back from Muslim emirates, as well as territories formerly belonging to other prominent southern houses such as the Rštuni and Anjewac'i.⁹⁸ We may look at this process in more detail as it provides a contextual background to the founding of Narekavank’.

⁹⁶ T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik' III.29, MH 11:252–54.1–18, trans. Thomson, 310–13.

⁹⁷ Pogossian, "Locating Religion, Controlling Territory," 184–85.

⁹⁸ Pogossian, "Locating Religion, Controlling Territory," 178–79.

During the captivity of Ašot and Grigor-Derenik in Sāmarrā’, their kinsman and rival, Gurgēn Apupelč, who had not capitulated to Islam, had led military campaigns against Arab tribes and taken control of key provinces of Vaspurakan, such as Anjewac’ik’, which T’ovma devotes a few chapters to detailing and eulogizing.⁹⁹ The returning princes therefore had first to contend with him upon their return. Grigor-Derenik, who returned first, attempted to seize Anjewac’ik’ from Gurgēn but failed.¹⁰⁰ Later, Ašot returned and likewise set himself to seeking to wrest control of Anjewac’ik’ from Gurgēn.

Arriving with his troops, Ašot sent as intermediary a junior Arcruni prince Vahan and a priest named T’ēodoros, the abbot of a prominent monastery in Anjewac’ik’, Hogeac’vank’,¹⁰¹ with the message that he was charged with the caliph to rule Vaspurakan and thus had a right to oust Gurgēn from his hold over Anjewac’ik’: “I have come in peace at an order from court and not, like you, to engage in rebellion. So give over half of Anjewac’ik’ to my son Derenik, and do not continue to act in opposition.”¹⁰² That T’ēodoros went as intermediary for Ašot reveals that very soon after his return from captivity, the latter had been able to patch up his image and standing with élite clergymen of the church.¹⁰³ While T’ovma does not detail how he was able to do so, one can conclude that he offered to patronize the monastery in some significant way in order to win the abbot T’ēodoros over to his side. The episode also may indicate that their loyalty ⁹⁹ T’ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.13–15, MH 11:209–23, trans. Thomson, 256–74.

¹⁰⁰ T’ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.15, MH 11:222.13–16, trans. Thomson, 272–73.

¹⁰¹ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 579, p. 104.

¹⁰² Ես եկի խաղաղութեամբ յարքունուստ հրամանէ, եւ ո՛չ նման քեզ զապստամբութիւն ի գործ արկեալ. արդ, թողացոյ զերկրորդ մասն Անձաւացեաց որդւոյ իմ Դերանկիրդ, եւ այլ մի՛ յաւելուր ընդ հակառակս ինչ ձեռն ի գործ արկանել: T’ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.15, MH 11:224.1, trans. Thomson, 276.

¹⁰³ For a lengthy discussion of this episode, see Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory,” 179–85.

to the caliph and conversion at the court had granted them the right to rule in the territory over rival princes, including family members such as Gurgēn, whose property he likely would have had a legal right to after his conversion to Islam. Eventually, Ašot and Gurgēn were able to arrange a peace treaty.¹⁰⁴

The Arcruni princes had also to contend with Arab emirates in the region. The ‘Uthmānids were one of the early Arab tribes to settle in Armenia in the late eighth century and centered themselves around the key commercial city of Berkri to the northeast of Lake Van. From there, they expanded southwards into territory along the eastern shores of Lake Van, taking the fortress of Amiwk and the important monastery of the Holy Cross on the mountain of Varag.¹⁰⁵ About the monastery, which housed a relic of the True Cross and was considered one of the stations at which the Hrip‘ simeank‘ virgin saints stopped in their flight through Armenia and for these two reasons was thus an important pilgrimage site,¹⁰⁶ T‘ovma writes that the ‘Uthmānids “had seized it and subjected to taxation the monks of the Holy Cross, and had even captured the abbot of the monastery who was called Grigor, and put him in a deep and gloomy dungeon.”¹⁰⁷ For an Armenian Christian readership, this of course hearkens back to Agat‘angelos’ depiction of the cruel treatment of Trdat, the unbelieving monarch, against S. Grigor the Illuminator, the righteous servant of God. The parallel is all the more obvious since the abbot of Varag monastery was named after S. Grigor. Ašot managed to take control of the ¹⁰⁴ T‘ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik III.15, MH 11:225.12, trans. Thomson, 277.

¹⁰⁵ Laurent and Canard, L’Arménie entre Byzance et l’Islam, 389–91 ; Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 56–7 ; T‘ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik III.18, MH 11:225–26.1–5, trans. Thomson, 277–78.

¹⁰⁶ See Pogossian, “Relics, Rulers, Patronage;” eadem, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory,” 185–93.

¹⁰⁷ զի յինքեանս գրաւեալ ընդ հարկաւ ծառայեցուցանէին զպաշտաւնեայս Սրբոյ Խաչին, մանաւանդ զի եւ զգլխաւորն՝ զվանացն զհայրն, որում Գրիգոր անուանէր՝ զնա կալեալ, եղեալ ի խորափոր խաւարային բանտի: T‘ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik III.18, MH 11:226.3, trans. Thomson, 278. See Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory,” 191.

monastery and bring it under his own protection, restoring its tax-exempt status. This afforded Ašot, who had earlier capitulated to Islam, the opportunity to present himself as a stalwart defender of the Christian religion, its institutions and relics, against the Muslim enemy.¹⁰⁸

When Gagik came to power in the beginning of the tenth century, he and his wife continued the pattern established by his father and grandfather by continuing to patronize the monastery. He and his wife sponsored the construction of new religious buildings, endowed it with villages and estates to promote its economic flourishing, and commissioned a luxurious reliquary to house the fragment of the True Cross.¹⁰⁹ To his wife is also ascribed the donation to Varag monastery of a lavishly illuminated Gospel manuscript known as the Queen Mlk'ē Gospels, one of the most famous and significant early gospel manuscripts to survive to the present day and the only one from the Kingdom of Vaspurakan.¹¹⁰ Gagik may also have been responsible for further elevating the status of the True Cross of Varag and its cult beyond the region of Vaspurakan.¹¹¹ The Feast of the Cross of Varag was eventually enshrined in the liturgical calendar of the Armenian Church —with a one-week fast preceding it which indicates the significance and solemnity of the Feast — the only such feast in the Armenian Church calendar to be dedicated to a local relic of the True Cross.¹¹²

Through negotiations with the governor of Diyār Bakr, 'Īsā b. al-Shaykh b. al-Salīl al-Shaybānī, who was the caliphal representative (ostikan) of Armenia at the time and had ¹⁰⁸ Pogossian, "Locating Religion, Controlling Territory," 192.

¹⁰⁹ Pogossian, "Locating Religion, Controlling Territory," 212; eadem, "Relics, Rulers, Patronage," 179–85 at 182.

¹¹⁰ On this manuscript and early Armenian gospel manuscripts in general, see Kouymjian, "Evolution of Armenian Gospel Illumination;" idem, "An Interpretation of Bagratid and Artsruni Art;" Mathews, "The Classic Phase of Bagratid and Artsruni Illumination;" Jones, Between Islam and Byzantium, 107–09; Maranci, Art of Armenia, 80–91.

¹¹¹ See Pogossian, "Relics, Rulers, Patronage," 179–90.

¹¹² Pogossian suggests that the entry of the feast into the Armenian church calendar may date to the reign of Gagik, when the catholicate was situated at Aht'amar. See Pogossian, "Relics, Rulers, Patronage," 188–89.

intervened in the conflict between the Arcruni princes and the ʿUthmānids, Ašot and Grigor-Derenik were also able to take control of the strategically and economically important city of Van, which was situated near a trade route that passed through southern Armenia.¹¹³ After Gagik became prince, he sponsored significant religious construction projects in Van, which underlined his reign as one marked by the defense of the Christian religion and the re-sacralization (or re-Christianization) of Armenian space recently held by Muslim rulers. The first church he sponsored there was built on the summit of the Rock of Van, the most important defensive location in the city and, as such, was aptly dedicated to the renowned military saint, St. George.¹¹⁴ The immediate significance of dedicating the church to St. George would obviously have borne reference to the recent victories of the Christian Arcrunis against the Muslim ʿUthmānids, and signaled their ongoing defense of Christian land.¹¹⁵ Even more significant was his construction of a complex of buildings on the Rock of Van meant to be a New Jerusalem in the heart of Vaspurakan.¹¹⁶ The New Jerusalem complex included a church dedicated to Holy Sion, a chapel to commemorate the Crucifixion at Golgotha, a chapel dedicated to the Upper Room to commemorate the Last Supper/First Eucharist, a chapel to commemorate the Resurrection from the Tomb, and finally a chapel dedicated to the Ascension.¹¹⁷

¹¹³ Tʿovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcruniks III.18.226–27.6–13, trans. Thomson, 278–79; Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory,” 208; Laurent and Canard, L’Arménie entre Byzance et l’Islam, 449–51; Canard, “ʿĪsā b. al-Shaykh,” Manandian, Trade and Cities, 155–56.

¹¹⁴ Tʿovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcruniks III.29.256.28, trans. Thomson, 315.

¹¹⁵ Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory,” 209.

¹¹⁶ Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory,” 209–10.

¹¹⁷ Tʿovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcruniks III.29, MH 11:256–57.27–34; trans. Thomson, 315–16. See Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory,” 210.

Creating a replica of Jerusalem's important holy sites in one's local territory through a religious building program is not an uncommon phenomenon in the history of Christianity.¹¹⁸ A similar process was underway in Constantinople, in what one scholar has termed the long history of the "Jerusalemization" of Constantinople, one of the most important periods of which was that of the contemporaneous Macedonian dynasty (867–1056), who patronized similar building programs and collected relics associated with the earthly ministry of Christ.¹¹⁹ Jerusalem held a privileged place for Armenians since the beginning of Christianity, and Armenian pilgrimage to, and presence in, the Holy City is attested from the fourth century onwards.¹²⁰ Gagik's patronage of a New Jerusalem in Vaspurakan naturally made it a pilgrimage center, and brought him all the spiritual and economic advantages that such centers garner. For a local unable to travel all the way to Jerusalem, whether for economic reasons or reasons of danger due to political unrest, pilgrimage to the New Jerusalem in Vaspurakan could have served as a substitute. For Gagik, the building of a New Jerusalem on the Rock of Van, carried further significance. It displayed in vivid visual and architectural form, his royal ideology that projected him as a powerful Christian ruler sanctioned by God to sponsor and protect holy places. This held special significance given the capitulation of his father and grandfather to Islam in the middle of the ninth century. The religious building projects in general, and the construction of a New Jerusalem in particular, played into Gagik's self-stylization as a new King David, a royal image that was a direct challenge to the Bagratuni kings to the North, to whom Gagik was related.¹²¹ It has been

¹¹⁸ For an overview of the phenomenon in general and case studies of individual New Jerusalems, see Lidov, New Jerusalems; Erdeljan, Chosen Places; Symcox, Jerusalem in the Alps; Mercier and Lepage, Lalibela; Phillipson, Ancient Churches of Ethiopia.

¹¹⁹ See Erdeljan, Chosen Places, 72–143 at 101–18.

¹²⁰ See Bonfiglio and Preiser-Kappeler, "From Ararat to Mount Zion."

¹²¹ While the Bagratid claim to Jewish ancestry goes back at least to the History of Movsēs Xorenac'i, the Georgian branch of the family claimed descent from King David since the end of the eighth century. See Toumanoff, Studies suggested that the iconography of the scene of David and Goliath on the east end of the southern façade of Gagik’s most famous extant religious building project, the church of the Holy Cross of Aht’amar, may contain an allusion to the transference of political power and divine blessing from the Bagratuni to the Arcruni, the former represented in the scene by the still crowned but lesser, discredited figure of Saul, while Gagik is represented by the youthful, warrior King David, whose martial victories led to his popular appeal.¹²² Gagik’s religious building projects thus were intimately connected with his quest to shore up political authority in his own realm and person, projecting himself as the divinely sanctioned ruler not just of Vaspurakan but of all of Armenia.

Gagik made Թճտունի՝ the center of his kingdom, the province that had formed the core of his political career since the death of his father Grigor-Derenik in 887 and the division of Arcruni holdings in Vaspurakan into three parts shared between the three sons.¹²³ On the death of his brother Ašot, Gagik and his brother Gurgēn divided the provinces of Vaspurakan between themselves.¹²⁴ Թճտունի՝ remained the core province of Gagik’s half of the territory and naturally his most prominent building projects were centered there.

in Christian Caucasian History, 327–29. The Armenian Bagratid connection to King David seems to have penetrated Armenian Bagratid royal ideology by the late ninth century, and is attested by Yovhannēs Draxanakertc’i, History of Armenia 4, MH 11:370.9, tr. Boisson-Chenorhokian, 78, tr. Maksoudian, 73. T’ovma introduces Gagik as bearing claim thus to dual royal lineage, through his Arcruni father Grigor-Derenik to the Assyrian King Sennacherim (Senek’erim) and through his Bagratuni mother Sop’i to King David:

“Gagik...descended from the noble and high-ranking stocks of Senek’erim and David (Գագիկ...յերկուց քաջատոհմիկ դահակալույթենէ՛ Սենեքերիմայ եւ Դաւթի).” See T’ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.29, MH 11:254–55.19; tr. Thomson, 315.

¹²² See Cowe, “Renewal of the Debate,” 246. For the image, see Der Nersessian, Aght’amar, figures 23, 26–27.

¹²³ “Gagik [had] the area of Թճտունի՝ with the neighbouring provinces and as much as he could obtain by force of the land of Mokka՛ (Իսկ Գագիկ զկողմանս Ռչտունեաց ալլովք մատակացիւք դաւառաւք, եւ որքան իցէ հատումն ուժոյ՝ անդր եւս յաշխարհն Մոկաց:).” T’ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.22, MH 11:240.14; tr. Thomson, 295.

¹²⁴ On the division, see T’ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.29, MH 11:255.21–24, tr. Thomson, 314.

More Building Activity Amid the Centralizing Efforts of Gagik Arcruni

T'ovma goes to great length in describing the many building projects undertaken by the two brothers, especially Gagik. Among a number of civil infrastructure projects, T'ovma highlights the construction of an aqueduct that provided water to the plain below Mount Varag allowing for greater settlement and population growth in the area.¹²⁵ In emphasizing this point, he may have had in mind Movsēs Xorenac'i's discussion of the aqueduct attributed to Queen Šamiram (Semiramis),¹²⁶ also located near Van, implying a comparison with a great monarch of antiquity and the implication that King Gagik's accomplishments surpass that of the former. Such comparisons wherein a contemporary Armenian figure surpasses the deeds of a biblical or other character of antiquity is a common trope in Armenian histories and panegyric. This precise comparison is made explicit by the anonymous continuator, who, when writing about Gagik's aqueduct, says:

In my opinion it surpassed in wonder the excavated chambers of Semiramis [in the rock of Van] and the aqueduct at the foot of Mount Varag. For the latter at least is on dry land, whereas this, built in the depths of the lake, transcends all the concepts and accomplishments of wise men previously achieved.¹²⁷

Gagik naturally focused first on fortifications, rebuilding walls and strongholds, and then erecting palatial residences in different parts of his territory to suit his royal ambitions. Near the eastern border of Vaspurakan, where the river Karmir runs into the Araxes, he had a stronghold constructed to secure the town of Mrakan, which was then built up with streets, dwellings, and ¹²⁵ T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik III.29, MH 11:256–57.33–34; tr. Thomson, 316.

¹²⁶ Movsēs Xorenac'i, History of Armenia I.16.

¹²⁷ Որպէս ինձ թուի՝ զանցոյց զարմանալեալք զշամիրամեան փորուածոյ սենեկեալքն եւ զամբարտակաւ գետոյն որ առ ստորոտով լերինն Վարագայ: Զի նորայն գոնեայ ի վերայ ցամաքի, իսկ սա ի մեծ խորոց ծովուս արուեստակեալ՝ հարստահարէ զամենայն միտս եւ զգործս առ ի քան զինքն եղելոց: T'ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcrunik IV.7, MH 11:288.7–8; tr. Thomson, 356.

other buildings, including another palace.¹²⁸ About a different palatial residence built near the northeastern limits of Vaspurakan, T‘ovma writes:

Furthermore, looking to the east in the direction of Čuašrot and the city of Getk‘,¹²⁹ he constructed a splendid palace of pleasure, surrounding with palatial buildings a hill from which one could look down onto the plain to the banks of the river Araxes. There herds of deer gamboled; there were lairs of boars and lions and herds of onagers, all ready for the pleasures of the chase—facing the mountains of Ayrarat, noble Masis, where Artawazd, son of Artašēs, fell headlong on the rough slopes.¹³⁰

Hunting was the preferred pastime of aristocratic and royal figures in the wider region going back to antiquity and is well illustrated in the Armenian past by the example of the Arsacids. More than just a pastime, in Arsacid Armenia the royal hunt and royal banquet that followed it was a key feature of traditional and ceremonial royal activity, which derived from Iranian royal customs among others in the region, as seen, for example, in texts such as the Šāhnāma and in other material remains, such as the reliefs at Taq-ī Bostan and in the scenes on the luxurious Sasanian silver plates that are extant.¹³¹ T‘ovma’s short excursus on the pleasure palace with its lush hunting grounds thus carried royal overtones, signaling a connection between Gagik and the former Aršakuni royal dynasty in Armenia. More immediate to Gagik’s own day, such activities placed him on a comparable footing with the aristocratic life of leisure enjoyed by caliphal amīrs, and the description of the pleasure palace also suggests ‘Abbāsīd models. The reference to the legend about the Artaxiad king Artawazd at the end of the passage, reinforces the connection

¹²⁸ T‘ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik III.29, MH 11:257.36; tr. Thomson, 316.

¹²⁹ For the location, see Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 93, p. 117.

¹³⁰ Դարձեալ վերականեալ յառաւաւտինս կոյս խաղացեալ ի Ճուաշուոտ ի Գետս աւան, շինէ անդ գլխելչական տեղի խրախից՝ բլուր մի պարսպեալ տաճարախիտ շինուածովք, որոյ հայեցածն առ դաշտակողմն ի վայր կոյս բերի, ի խաղս գետոյն Երասխայ, ուր հոյլքն էրէոցն խալտան եւ վայրենեացն խոզից եւ առեւծուցն մորիքն եւ երամակք ցոռց պատրաստական առ որսոյն հրճուանք առ ձեռն պատրաստ հոյլիին, ընդդէմ նայելով լեւրանցն Այրարատեան ազատն Մասեաց, ուր Արտաւազդն Արտաշէսեան քարավիժեալ խոհամանայր ի կոշտն կոհակին: T‘ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik III.29, MH 11:257.35; tr. Thomson, 316.

¹³¹ On this, see Garsoïan, “Prolegomena,” 183–84.

between Gagik and the Armenian royal past.¹³² Once again, we see the panegyric trope of the present figure surpassing the former at play. Gagik emerges as a more illustrious and successful dynast in that he first of all built his own hunting preserve rather than simply going out into the countryside like Artawazd, and secondly, he is safe and successful, whereas the former figure erred in desecrating a holy mountain and suffered a dire penalty for doing so.

Gagik's most prominent building projects were located in Ostan and Ałt'amar, the heart of the province formerly belonging to the Rštunik, which he made into the center of Vaspurakan. The former city was located on the southern shore of Lake Van and the latter was a small island located in view of Ostan, about three kilometers from the southern shore. Control of the area gave Gagik access to profits from the fishing and exportation of the tarrex fish from Lake Van, one of the chief exports of Armenia in this period, as previously mentioned.¹³³ Naturally, he first built up defenses, fortifying the walls in Ostan.¹³⁴ He then rebuilt the city's church dedicated to the Holy Mother of God and in addition to other valuable liturgical vessels,¹³⁵ deposited there a cross that had been associated with a miraculous event and that he had had repaired by a goldsmith and "covered with pure silver more splendidly than before to the glory of the Christians and to the shame and ignominy of the enemies of Christ's cross."¹³⁶ As Pogossian notes, along with his earlier patronage of the True Cross of Varag and his subsequent building of ¹³² On Artawazd, see Russell, Zoroastrianism in Armenia, 400–07. T'ovma's source may have been Movsēs Xorenac'i, History of Armenia II.61, MH 2:1940–42, tr. Thomson, 199–201.

¹³³ Manandian, Trade and Citeis, 147, 150. This is also mentioned by the anonymous continuator as one of the benefits of the town of Ostan. See T'ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcrunik', IV.6, MH 11:286.7, tr. Thomson, 353.

¹³⁴ T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik' III.29, MH 11:256.27; tr. Thomson, 315.

¹³⁵ T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik' III.29, MH 11:256.27; tr. Thomson, 315.

¹³⁶ Պատեալ մաքուր արծաթով, վայելչագոյն քան զառաջինն, ի պարծանս քրիստոնէից եւ յամաւթ եւ ի նախատինս թշնամեաց խաչին Քրիստոսի: T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik' III.27, MH 11:250.6, tr. Thomson, 307. See Pogossian, "Locating Religion, Controlling Territory," 196–206.

the Church of the Holy Cross at Alt‘amar, T‘ovma here highlights Gagik and his family’s loyalty and devotion to the cross — as both symbol and object — and the Armenian Church in the face of its opponents, which included both external ones (namely, the Muslim emirates) and internal ones (especially the T‘ondrakeans — about whom more will be said in the next chapter — who were notable for their iconoclastic destruction of crosses and other ritual objects).¹³⁷

The principal building projects in Ostan and Alt‘amar took place after the death of T‘ovma, and therefore it is the anonymous continuator who writes about them. These took place after Gagik’s alliance with the ostikan Yūsuf in 908 (against the Bagratuni King Smbat), who in return dubbed him “king of Armenia.” Perhaps as a physical manifestation of his elevated position as king of Vaspurakan, Gagik made Ostan and Alt‘amar into twin capitals, complete with newly constructed splendid royal palaces.¹³⁸ Composed just after the death of Gagik to eulogize his great deeds, it is clear that it was his constructions in Ostan and Alt‘amar that stood out most to those who could look back on Gagik’s lifelong accomplishments: “Of the many castles fortified in his name, [Gagik] was especially pleased with two places and watched over them personally. One was at the edge of the lake; its name was Ostan in the province of Rštunik’.”¹³⁹ As we learn shortly, the next was Alt‘amar. In addition to their strategic defensive location, their proximity to the southern trade route, and the profitable natural resources they gave access to (especially the tarax fish of Lake Van), the anonymous continuator waxes eloquent about the beauty of the natural environment, the pleasant weather, and picturesque location of the lakeside town of Ostan and island of Alt‘amar. The splendid palace and pavilions at Ostan seem to have made special use of the natural environment and lighting, and the anonymous continuator notes the way the exterior gold decorations and various colors glittered in the sun and the dazzling way in which light passed through the windows at different times of day in order to illuminate “the multicolored images, pictures, and various decorations,” housed within.¹⁴⁰ Thus, the palace would have equally dazzled the viewer from afar as it would the visitor who entered inside the gates.

¹³⁷ See Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory,” 196–206. Gagik’s own name was a local variant of the name Xač‘ik (‘little cross’ from xac‘, ‘cross’), and it has been noted that this may have influenced his particular devotion to the quintessential Christian symbol. See, recently, Pogossian, “Relics, Rulers, Patronage,” 195.

¹³⁸ For the territory inherited by Gagik, see T‘ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik’ III.29, MH 11:255.22–23, tr. Thomson, 314. The building projects at Ostan and Alt‘amar are especially highlighted by the anonymous continuator.

¹³⁹ Յորոց ի բազում ամրոցաց պարսպելոց յիւր անուն՝ յերկուս տեղիս կարի իմն յոյժ հաճեալ նուաճէ ակնակառոյց լինելով. մինն առ եզերք ծովուն, որ է Ոստան ի գաւառին Ռշտունեաց: T‘ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcrunik’, IV.6, MH 11:286.5, tr. Thomson, 353.

For the anonymous continuator, the greatest of Gagik’s building projects were on the island of Alt‘amar, the palace and church of the Holy Cross.¹⁴¹ One of the reasons for Gagik’s choice of Alt‘amar island for his grand palace and new church was its defensive and inaccessible location, in addition of course to its natural beauty: “In [Gagik’s] excellent wisdom, seeing the pleasantness of the spot and recognizing that it was a refuge from enemy raids, he undertook to build on it in a fearsome and amazing fashion.”¹⁴² The natural security of the island meant that any attack upon it would have had to be naval, and since there was no sizable naval force nearby nor a means to easily ferry troops to the island, one could feel reasonably secure about the safety of the site. Gagik had a foundation laid that descended into the lake, which facilitated the construction of a defensive wall with towers and bastions and an accompanying harbor for shipping and supplies.¹⁴³ Then on the island were made streets, pleasure gardens and parks, and residences for princes and other dignitaries.¹⁴⁴ Gagik then arranged for an international team of artisans to work on these building projects, and charged one of them with the architectural design of a palace. The anonymous continuator finds language inadequate to express the sublimity of the royal palace that was constructed forty cubits in length, depth, and width:

¹⁴⁰ գղրաւշեալ պատկերատիպսն եւ զզանազան յաւրինուածսն. T‘ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcrunik‘, IV.6, MH 11:286.11, tr. Thomson, 354.

¹⁴¹ “From the beginning of the settlement of Armenia many buildings and constructions were raised in our land by Hayk the Archer and his descendants, and by the amorous and lascivious Semiramis, queen of Assyria, [which have been described] by others with unerring indications. These we have visited in person and seen with our own eyes, travelling to distant parts: as far as Kłarjk‘ and the Šušetac‘ik‘ and the foot of the Caucasus mountain, and to Ahiz as far as the entrance to Gał, across Tayastan and all the norther regions and the East. Travelling on foot, we have seen the works of valiant men and [our] ancestors. But our mind and sight were struck most of all by the splendid, marvellous, and wonderful Alt‘amar (եւ անվրէպ յայտարարութեամբք որ ինչ ի սկզբանց անտի շինութեան աշխարհիս Հայոց ի Հայկայ աղեղնաւորէ եւ ի նորուն զարմից եւ զկաթոտ եւ վաւաչոտ Շամիրամն՝ տիկին Ասորեստանեաց, եւ ի նմանէ յայլս եւ յայլոց եւս յաւէտ ձեռակերտք եւ շինուածք յիւրաքանչիւրոցն յերկրիս մերում եղեն: Մեր առ ամենայն անձամբ հասեալ եւ աչաւք, ձկտեալ եւ ի հեռաւոր աշխարհս՝ մինչեւ ցկողարջս եւ Շուշեթացիս եւ առ լերամբն Կաւկոսայ եւ յԱհիզ, մինչեւ ի մուտն ի Գաղայ, եւ ընդ Տայաստան եւ ընդ ամենայն հիւսիսականս եւ ընդ արեւելս ի հետիոտս գնալով՝ տեսաք զգործ քաջաց եւ նախնեաց: Միայն զմերս գրաւեաց զմիտս եւ գտեսութիւն՝ հրաշակերտն եւ քան զբազումս նորանշանն եւ զարմանալին Աղթամար:)” T‘ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcrunik‘, IV.7, MH 11:287.1–3, trans. Thomson, 354–55.

The construction of the palace, from its foundations to its summit, took the form of a bird in flight, without the support of any pillar. It was truly worthy of admiration surpassing understanding. It had vaulted domes and niches and beautifully decorated surroundings, innumerable and incomprehensible to the mind and eye. It also had domes like heaven, ornamented with gold and shining with light. If anyone wished to look at them, as if honouring a king first he must remove his head covering, and then twisting his neck he will scarcely be able to distinguish the various beautiful representations. The structure of the palace is extraordinary and astonishing, and so surpassing and incomprehensible to the imagination that if an intelligent man were to examine only one section of one dome for many hours, on coming out he would be unable to tell anyone anything of what he had seen.¹⁴⁵

¹⁴² Գագիկայ... քաջակորով գիտութեամբ նայեցեալ ի տեղւոյն զբաւսանս եւ ծանուցեալ զնա ապաստան լինել աշխարհի ի հինից թշնամեաց՝ ձեռն արկէ հիմնարկել զնա ասեղ իմն եւ զարմանալի հիացմամբ: T’ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcrunik, IV.7, MH 11:287.3, tr. Thomson, 355.

¹⁴³ T’ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcrunik, IV.7, MH 11:287–88.4–8, tr. Thomson, 355–56.

¹⁴⁴ T’ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcrunik, IV.7, MH 11:288.11–12, trans. Thomson, 356.

¹⁴⁵ Եւ շինուած տաճարին ի հիմանց անտի մինչեւ ցգլուխ նորին ի թռիչս կազմեալ՝ առանց սեանց ունի զհաստատութիւն. եւ է որ արդարեւ արժանի զարմանալոյ ի վեր քան զմիտս: Ունի եւ խորանն կամարակիցս եւ անկիւնս եւ շրջապատս գեղապաճոյճս, անթիւ մտաց եւ անզննելի աչաց: Ունիս եւ գումբէթս երկնահարթս ոսկեզարդս եւ լուսաճաճանչս, յոր թէ նայել ոք կամիցի՝ իբր թագաւոր իմն պատիւ առնելով, նախ ի բաց առցէ գիտոյր գլխոյն, եւ ապա տանջէալ զպարանոցն՝ հագիւ թէ նշմարել կարիցէ զզանազան դեղոցն կերպագրութիւնս: Եւ է կարգ շինուածոյ տաճարին ասեղ իմն եւ զարմանալի, եւ այնքան բարձրագոյն եւ անհաս է մտաց, զոր աւրինակ թէ իմաստուն ոք այր ընդ մի կարգ խորանի միոջ զբազում ժամս նայեսցի, արտաքս ելեալ՝ ոչ ինչ յորոց նայեցան պատմել ումեք կարասցէ: T’ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcrunik, IV.7, MH 11:289.15–18, tr. Thomson, 357.

The continuator goes on to give a brief description of the palace's frescoed paintings, which included scenes to delight the king: a court room with a splendid depiction of the king enthroned and surrounded by dignitaries; scenes of courtly entertainment such as minstrel singers and young female dancers; scenes of sport, of warfare, of nature with wild and exotic animals, and of warfare.¹⁴⁶ These reveal something of Gagik's personal taste, which emerges as a typical example of the Armeno-Iranian military-aristocratic ethos of naxarar dynasts and also align well with the contemporary rulers of the wider 'Abbāsīd Islamicate world. Unfortunately, nothing of the palace survives to the present day, so we have only the anonymous continuator's panegyric description.¹⁴⁷

Gagik's second great building project on Ałt'amar island was the Church of the Holy Cross. It took some seven years to complete, being constructed between 915–921. The Church of the Holy Cross of Ałtamar is the only major religious building project of Gagik's to survive relatively intact to the present day. Neither the palace nor the other churches or monasteries in Vaspurakan mentioned in this chapter survive in anything like their earlier form. For that reason, and also its architectural brilliance, the Church of the Holy Cross has merited the attention of many art historians and other scholars.¹⁴⁸ However, in its own time, it would have been dwarfed ¹⁴⁶ T'ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator], History of the House of the Arcruniks, IV.7, MH 11:289.18–20, tr. Thomson, 357–58.

¹⁴⁷ It was intentionally destroyed, since no symbols of secular power were tolerated under later Islamic rule. Presumably, the destruction dates from Ottoman times, perhaps the campaigns of Selim I in the early sixteenth century, if not before. Only the cathedral and monastic buildings were spared, on the basis of which the catholicate continued until 1896.

¹⁴⁸ As a starting point, see Pogossian and Vardanyan, Church of the Holy Cross; Der Nersessian, Ałt'amar; Jones, Between Islam and Byzantium; Mnats'akanyan, Ałt'amar.

by the palace, much like the image of Gagik on the west façade of the Church of the Holy Cross surpasses in size the image of Christ.¹⁴⁹

Among several notable features of the church is the series of over 200 sculptural reliefs decorating the exterior of the church, depicting biblical and other scenes and natural vegetation and animals. The reliefs on the west façade mentioned just previously feature a visual depiction of King Gagik presenting a model of the church to Christ and the upper register of the east façade has a smaller portrait of Gagik, seated cross-legged on a cushion throne (taxt or gah).¹⁵⁰ In both, it has been noted how the visual expression of his royalty “was modeled after the current symbol of Islamic authority,” the larger political structure of which his local polity formed a part.¹⁵¹ At the same time, however, it should be emphasized that the ‘Abbāsīd caliphate itself drew heavily upon Sasanian models, which draw on even earlier Iranian precedent. For example, the depiction of Gagik seated on a cushion throne, while it parallels depictions of ‘Abbāsīd caliphs, such as that preserved on a medallion issued by caliph al-Moqtadir,¹⁵² this was the customary regnal posture of the Arsacid kings of Armenia as well.¹⁵³ Furthermore, the use of a crown in the depiction of Gagik on the west façade — and this despite the fact that he never even had an actual coronation ceremony — is clearly non-Islamic and intended particularly for the Armenian Christian viewer, for whom the crown is the mark of legitimate kingship in the Christian context.

¹⁴⁹ Grigoryan, “King Gagik Arcruni’s Portrait,” 417, figure 15.2.

¹⁵⁰ On the portraits of Gagik, see Grigoryan, “King Gagik Arcruni’s Portrait;” Eastmond and Jones, “Robing, Power, and Legitimacy,” 159–63; Jones, Between Islam and Byzantium, 57–63.

¹⁵¹ Eastmond and Jones, “Robing, Power, and Legitimacy,” 161.

¹⁵² Jones, Between Byzantium and Islam, 57–59.

¹⁵³ On the cushion throne (called either taxt or gah) of royal figures in the Arsacid era, see, for example, Garsoïan, Epic Histories IV.16, V.24. See also in Garsoïan’s translation the (third) appendix of technical terms, s.v. “barj;” “bazmakan/bazmoc’k’;” “gah/gahoyk’.”

The palace and church at Ałt‘amar proclaimed in vivid visual and architectural language the goal that Gagik was able to shortly realize: the convergence of pan-Armenian political and religious power in this new center of Vaspurakan.¹⁵⁴ The new palace served as a fit royal residence of this newly minted Armenian “king of kings,” and was intended to match in its architectural scale, artistry, and luxurious entertainment, the ‘Abbāsīd palaces at Partaw (Bardha‘a) and Sāmarrā’.¹⁵⁵ The construction of the Church of the Holy Cross served as a fit place to celebrate not just a royal liturgy, but also a patriarchal one. As mentioned in the previous chapter, the Catholicos Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc‘i (sed. 898 – 924/5) left the traditional catholicosal residence at Duin in the midst of Yūsuf’s military campaigns against the Bagratids in the 920s and took refuge under Gagik’s protection in Vaspurakan. Gagik was then able to successfully orchestrate to the catholicate the next four catholicoi all from nearby southern houses of Vaspurakan — three from Rštunik‘ and one from Mokk‘ — and maintain their ongoing residence beside him on Ałt‘amar Island. Obviously, this would have ensured that these catholicoi would be more beholden to King Gagik and pursue policies that aligned with his interests. While the traditional way a catholicos was elected was primarily through the participation of bishops called together in council for that purpose, a recent precedent had been set by the first Bagratid king — then “prince of princes (իշխան իշխանաց)” — Ašot, by which the preeminent prince or king took a leading role in the catholicosal election. In his History, Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc‘i relates that Ašot was the principal agent in choosing Gēorg II of Gaṙni (sed. 877 – 897): “Then the prince of princes Ašot chose an honorable man from the household of the catholicate named Gēorg, who was from the town of Gaṙni, and ordered him to ¹⁵⁴ Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory,” 215–16.

¹⁵⁵ Cowe, “Renewal of the Debate,” 246.

be ordained to the prelacy of the house of T'orgom (Togarmah)."¹⁵⁶ The Bagratuni kings succeeding Ašot did not however enjoy the kind of undivided loyalty that Ašot did and thus were usually not in a position to claim the prerogative of making a catholicosal appointment.¹⁵⁷ Upon Catholicos Gēorg's death, King Smbat I Bagratuni thus returned to the traditional method of calling a council to choose the next catholicos. This much broader participation in choosing the next catholicos, Maštoc' (sed. 897 – 898) is represented by Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc' i in the following way: “the king, the most senior princes, and the most honorable freemen... appointed him to the throne of the Holy Illuminator, Grigor.”¹⁵⁸ The same procedure was followed for the appointment of the next catholicos, Yovhannēs himself (sed. 898 – ca. 924). Commenting on his own election, Yovhannēs writes, “After Maštoc', I, Yovhannēs, who wrote this book... was led to the holy throne, not because of my worthiness, but because I could not refuse the order of the king and the multitude of other naxarars.”¹⁵⁹ While Yovhannēs does not mention the presence of bishops or other clergy in either of these two elections, Krikor Maksoudian comments that they must have taken part in the council. The lack of reference to clerics is likely due to the fact that his History is addressed to the rulers of Armenia and is meant to highlight their role in events.¹⁶⁰

¹⁵⁶ Ապա իշխանն իշխանաց Աշոտ ընտրեալ զայր մի պատուական յրնտանաց տան կաթողիկոսարանին Գէորգ անուն, որ էր ի գիւղաքաղաքէն Գառնոյ, հրամայէ ձեռնադրել զնա յառաջնորդութիւն տանս Թորգոմայ: Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc' i, History of Armenia 28, MH 11:442.13.

¹⁵⁷ Maksoudian, Chosen of God, 36.

¹⁵⁸ Թագաւորն եւ գահամեծար իշխանքն եւ պատուական արք ազատք...կացուցին զնա յաթոռ սուրբ Լուսաւորչին Գրիգորի: Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc' i, History of Armenia 36, MH 11:470.6.

¹⁵⁹ Զկնի սորա...ես...Յովհաննէս, որ զսոյն զայս գրեցի գիրս, ոչ ըստ արժանեաց ածայ յաթոռ սրբութեան, թերեւս ոչ կարացեալ դիմակ գոյ հրամանի արքային եւ կամ այլոց եւս նախարարակոյտ բազմութեանն: Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc' i, History of Armenia 36, MH 11:470.8.

¹⁶⁰ “Hovhannēs’ silence about the presence of bishops and clergy in general at these two elections—one of them his own—raises serious problems. We must look for an answer in his History. Unlike other medieval historical works in Armenian, Hovhannēs’ treatise is addressed to the rulers of Armenia and contains a specific political message about cooperation, peace, and unity in Christian Caucasia. In the History there is almost no information given about contemporary church life. Hovhannēs mentions by name only one Armenian bishop, and mentions him only as a martyr. He refrains from referring to ecclesiastical issues, ceremonies and problems that have no bearing on the design and message of his treatise. We know nothing about even his own activities from the History, but rather from other historians and epigraphical evidence. This approach to the events suggests that Hovhannēs was trying to

While we have little direct evidence for the manner in which the next three catholicos — Step‘anos II Թճունի (sed. ca. 925), T‘ēodoros I Թճունի (sed. 925 – 934/5), Elišē Թճունի (sed. 934/5 – 941/2) — were elected, we may infer the importance of King Gagik Arcruni’s role by information given by Anania Mokac‘i on his own election (sed. 941/2 – ca. 963/4 or 965/6). Referencing those involved in his own election to the catholicate, Anania Mokac‘i mentions first “Lord Gagik Arcruni, King of Armenia” and then “Lord Abas Bagratuni... King of Greater Armenia,” followed by “their royal scions as well as all the bishops, monastics, and other ascetic solitaries, and the requests and unanimous appeals of abbots.”¹⁶¹ This, along with the fact that all four were from southern houses close to King Gagik’s capitals at Ostan and Ałt‘amar and kept their residence there until Gagik’s death, indicates the leading role he took in the election of Anania, and by implication, his three predecessors.¹⁶² This highlights the way in which Gagik made Vaspurakan the concrete center of Armenian political and ecclesiastical power throughout his reign. Thus, from the early 920s, when Yovhannēs relocated to Ałt‘amar, to the late 940s after Gagik’s death, when Anania Mokac‘i moved the residence back to the Bagratid realm in the North (at Argina), the center of political and ecclesiastical power in Armenia had migrated south from the Bagratid realm and Duin to be centered in Թճունի of Vaspurakan, at the twin capitals impress the contemporary kings and princes with the fact that they and their predecessors were the ones who elected him and his predecessors to the highest office of catholicos of Greater Armenia, and that despite their divisiveness, they owed respect to his office and authority as an arbitrator and high justice. In a context of this nature, any mention of participating bishops would weaken Hovhannēs’ argument. We must also add that the participation of feudal lords in both elections indicates that councils indeed took place. It is impossible to imagine that a council of feudal lords or nakharars would convene to elect a catholicos without any bishops participating.” Maksoudian, Chosen of God, 36–37.

¹⁶¹ Տեառնն Գագիկայ Արծրունոյ Հայոց Թագաւորի... տեառնն Աբասայ Բագրատունոյ... Սեծի Հայոց արքայի... սոցին թագազան զարմիցն եւ համարէն եպիսկոպոսաց եւ վանականաց եւ այլ ճգնաւոր մենաւորաց, առաջնորդից հայցմանց եւ միաձայն բողոքանաց Anania Mokac‘i, “Concerning the Rebellion of the House of the Albanians,” MH 10:256.6–7.

¹⁶² See also Hats‘uni, Kat‘oghikosakan ěntrut‘iwn, 33–34; Maksoudian, Chosen of God, 37.

of Ostan and Alt‘amar, represented in the persons of King Gagik and the catholicoi from southern houses.

Narekavank‘: Making a Spiritual-Intellectual Center at the Ecclesiastical and Political Capital

Gagik’s efforts at centralization around Ostan and Alt‘amar island still lacked one major source of societal power: the charismatic, spiritual, and intellectual authority of a major monastery. My view is that the founding of Narek monastery during this period formed part of Gagik’s larger effort to centralize Armenian power and influence around Ostan and the island of Alt‘amar, but this time targeting the spiritual-intellectual-monastic realm and involving another southern migration, this time of two locally famous vardapets, Anania and his companion Petros.

The founding of Narek is not mentioned in the History of T‘ovma or the anonymous continuator. Why? As I will discuss below, the founding occurred at the end of Gagik’s reign — or at the very beginning of that of his immediate successor, Derenik-Ašot (ca. 943 – 953/8) — and thus it could not have been mentioned by T‘ovma, whose narrative cuts off in the first decade of the 900s. Further, we have seen that the anonymous continuator is not a continuator in the sense that he was picking up T‘ovma’s History and continuing the narrative. Rather, it is a panegyrically-infused account written shortly after the death of Gagik in order to eulogize his greatest deeds. Naturally, in such an account it is no surprise that many building projects are overlooked, as the writer focuses his attention on the most impressive ones, like the palace and church of Alt‘amar. The last building project he mentions is that of the church of the Holy Cross at Alt‘amar (completed in 921). Narek monastery was famous not so much for its architectural brilliance — the main criterion for the anonymous continuator’s selection of subject matter to eulogize — but for its spiritual and intellectual brilliance, which even so was still in the early years of its development at the time of the anonymous continuator’s eulogy. It is thus understandable why the anonymous continuator overlooked mentioning the founding of Narek monastery in his composition.¹⁶³

Had T’ovma lived until the founding of Narek monastery, we would likely have had a description of it from him. One may surmise the kind of thing he would have written from the description of a monastery founded in an earlier period of Gagik’s building activity, the monastery of St. Peter’s (S. Petrosi vank‘) at Mahrast.¹⁶⁴ T’ovma writes:

At the time that Gagik was general [i.e., 895–904] he had begun his constructions. He built a high embankment at the village of Mahrast on the eastern bank of the river facing Ostan of R̥štunik‘, where there had previously been the walled palace of the Patrician Vard R̥štuni, descendant of Hayk. He appointed as abbot a certain priest named Yovhannēs from the province of Boguni and the village of Anstan. Here he instituted a settlement of monks and entrusted their direction to the above-mentioned priest, who was a gentle man, humble and honorable in his way of life, most appropriate for [the position] to which he had been called. The general set aside for the monastery sufficient villages for the reception of pilgrims and the care of the poor. There he built a splendid and glorious church dedicated to Saint Peter the apostle, the invincible custodian of hell, and to the right and left of the altar another two churches.¹⁶⁵

¹⁶³ And also why the foundation of Narekavank‘ is left out of Zaroui Pogossian’s otherwise thorough study of the Arcruni royal rise to power through political accession of territory and their religious patronage and sacralization of newly won territory through religious building projects. See Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory.” It likely was left outside the scope of her study because Narekavank‘ is nowhere mentioned by T’ovma Arcruni or the Anonymous Continuator in the History of the House of the Arcrunik‘, on which her study largely depends.

¹⁶⁴ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 546, p. 98; Oskean, Vaspurakan-Vani vank‘erē, 187. NB: Thierry references incorrect page numbers to Oskean in the bibliography section on this monastery.

¹⁶⁵ Իսկ ի տիրական զաւրաւարութեանն Գագիկայ սկզբնաւորեալ ձեռակերտ իւր՝ շինեաց զհողաբլուր բարդաւանդակն ի Մահրաստ գեաւղ՝ յափն գետոյն յելս կոյս, որ հայի յՈստանն Ռշտունեաց, յորում տեղւոջ յառաջագոյն ապարանք պարսպաւորք եղեալ էր Վարդ պատրկի Ռշտունեոյ հայկազնոյ, եւ վերակացու նմա թողոյր զՅովաննէս ոմն քահանայ ի Բողունի գաւառէ, ի յԱնստան գեղջէ: Յորում տեղւոջ բանակ կրանաւորաց կարգեաց, եւ հաւատաց զառաջնորդութիւնն նախասացեալ քահանային, որ էր այր հեզ, ցածուն եւ պատուական վարուք եւ պատշաճագոյն յոր կոչեցան. եւ զատուցանէ զաւրաւարն վանիցն գեաւղս՝ բաւական առ ընկալումն հիւրոցն եւ ի տեսութիւն աղքատացն: Շինէ անդ եկեղեցի վայելչապէս պայծառութեամբ եւ անուանէ զնա յանուն Սուրբ Պետրոսի առաքելոյն՝ անպարտելի դժոխական առաջնորդի: Եւ յաջմէ եւ յահեկէ սեղանոյն այլ եւս Բ. եկեղեցիս: T’ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik‘ III.29, MH 11:258.43–46; tr. Thomson, 317–18 (slightly modified).

By this, we may deduce a pattern of building a monastery nearby an important city (in this case, Ostan), appointing a respected abbot to regulate its life, and providing for its means through endowed villages. We can infer a similar arrangement for the founding of Narek.

Nevertheless, there were some crucial differences that signal the different raisons d'être for the two monasteries. Since St. Peter's monastery at Mahrast was located near the capital of Ostan and not far from the southern trade route, part of its role was to provide lodging for the reception of pilgrims or other wayfarers as well as social services for the poor, in addition to being a place of prayer. One notes the parallel with Horomos monastery, founded not far from the future Bagratid capital of Ani, which was known, among other things, for its hospitality in providing lodging and other sustenance to travelers, merchants, and wayfarers.¹⁶⁶ Narekavank', on the other hand, was founded on the less traveled side of Ostan not far from the southern shore of Lake Van facing Aht'amar island and closer to the latter than the former. Its more remote geographical location, away from the hustle and bustle of the highly trafficked trade route, signals its focus on spiritual, intellectual, and liturgical/musical activity. Likewise, nearby — about an hour's walk away — were caves on a small mountain where monks could go out to spend time in solitary ascetic or contemplative activity.¹⁶⁷

The selection of such high-powered scholars as Anania and Petros to lead the direction of the monastery also indicates that Narek was conceived with the purpose of charting new territory, by creating a major monastic school for the region. If not the very first of its kind in this regard, it was one of the very first, which, along with major centers like Halbat and Sanahin ¹⁶⁶ Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:751.25–26, tr. Greenwood, 225. On the monastery, see Vardanyan, Horomos Monastery.

¹⁶⁷ For a description of these caves and with photos of the site in its contemporary state, see Hakobyan, “Surb Grigor Narekats'u chgnaranē.”

founded later in the century, became the model for the subsequent monastic academies that were the producers and transmitters of Armenian high culture into the early modern period. The vardapets Anania and Petros had made a name for themselves in monasteries in southern Bagratid Armenia near the border with Vaspurakan before they were invited to lead Narek monastery.¹⁶⁸ As noted in an earlier chapter, their contemporary, Samuēl Kamrġajorec‘i, who belonged to the monastery of Kamrġajor in Aršarunik‘ also in southern Bagratid territory, mentions that they had dwelt at monasteries in Antak‘ in Hawnunik‘ and Xawarajor in Aršarunik‘ before being called to Narek.¹⁶⁹ That they held something of local celebrity status among religious figures of the time is noted by another piece of evidence, namely their being singled out — as is Narek monastery itself — in the chapter of Step‘anos Tarōneci’s Universal History that otherwise focuses on monasteries and monastics/hermits/vardapets in the northern, western, and eastern portions of Armenia, i.e. those with Bagratid connections. In his list of monasteries founded in this period, Narek is the only one in Vaspurakan to be mentioned: “Also at this time, Narek was built, in the district of R̄štunik‘, under the same regulation, with multi-talented singers who added brilliance to worship, and learned scholars.”¹⁷⁰ Likewise, among the hermits and vardapets mentioned in the chapter, Petros and Anania are the only who are known to have been active in a monastery in Vaspurakan. In a section praising vardapets of the day, Tarōnec‘i singles out among a short list of clerics, “Petros, true commentator of the holy Scriptures; and Anania, a great scholar, who was a monk of Narek. His book was directed against the sect of T‘ondrakac‘ik‘ and other heresies.’¹⁷¹ Their renown must have been so great that even after they went south to Vaspurakan, Step‘anos could not fail to mention them. It is possible that he had met one or both of them himself, since he mentions that he had seen and spoken in his youth with some of the vardapets he wrote about.¹⁷² Undoubtedly too, Anania’s and Petros’ renown grew exponentially through their activity at Narek, which will be explored in future chapters. The only surviving vark‘ (‘life, biography’) of Anania, which is contained in a lone synaxarion (Yaysmawurk‘) from Isfahan in 1719, singles out precisely this notable fact, namely, that Anania’s and Narek’s fame extended beyond the confines of Vaspurakan, even into Bagratid Armenia:

¹⁶⁸ Anania’s selection may also have had to do with his familial ties to Xosrov Anjewac‘i, although the latter was not yet bishop at the time of Anania’s appointment to abbot of Narek.

¹⁶⁹ Samuēl Kamrġajorec‘i, Explanation of Feasts, MH 10:718–22 at 720.20.

¹⁷⁰ Այսպէս եւ յայսմ ժամանակիս շինեցաւ Նարեկ ի Ռշտունեաց գաւառին նոյն կարգաւորութեամբ, բազմազարդ պաշտաւնապալծառ երգեցողովք եւ գրական գիտողաւք: Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:751.27, tr. Greenwood, 225.

He became even more learned in the philosophical arts to the point that the unattainable spirituality of his knowledge became proclaimed abroad in every place, even in the kingdom of Armenia of the pious Abas Bagratuni, from the land of Rštunik‘ where the very renowned monastery called Narek was built.¹⁷³

Monastic Foundations and Armenian Dynastic Rivalry

The naxarar dynasts’ monastic foundations in this period were, among other things, used as a means of gaining regional influence and thus formed part of the way in which they competed with rival rulers for prestige and control over an area. The monastery of Sewan (Sewanay vank‘¹⁷⁴), founded between 871–874, was the earliest of the new cenobitic foundations begun after Ašot Bagratuni’s rise and marks the beginning of two centuries of major monastic ¹⁷¹ Եւ Պետրոս, հաւաստի մեկնիչ Գրոց սրբոց. եւ Անանիա, փիլիսոփայն մեծ, որ եւ վանական Նարեկի: Սորա եւ գիրս է ասացեալ ընդդէմ աղանդոյն Թոնդրակաց եւ այլոց հերձուածոց: Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:753.51–52, tr. Greenwood, 229.

¹⁷² Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:754.53.

¹⁷³ Եւ առաւել եւս հմուտ լեալ փիլիսոփայական արհեստից, մինչ գի յամ[ենայն] տեղիս տարածեալ հռչակեցաւ անհաս ոգե[ւորու]թի[ւն] գիտութե[ան] նորին՝ եւ ի թագաւորութե[ան] Հայոց բարեպաշտին արասայ բագրատունոյն յերկրէն ուշտունեաց. իբրեւ շինեցաւ մեծահռչակ վանսն որ կոչի նարեկ: Yaysmawurk‘, M 7359, 183r. For the full text of the vark‘, see Appendix A.

¹⁷⁴ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 728, p. 129.

building activity.¹⁷⁵ Monastic foundations soon dotted the landscape of all three of the major domains controlled by the Siwni, Bagratuni, and Arcruni.

Siwnik' became a particularly fecund place for cenobitic foundations in the late ninth and early tenth century, as the local princes vied to bolster their prestige in competition with one another and the newly crowned Bagratuni monarchs. Among the monasteries established, refounded, or enlarged in Siwnik' in this period, mention could be made of Šoġagay vank',¹⁷⁶ founded ca. 885 on the southwestern shore of Lake Sewan in Geġak'unik' and Vanevanay vank',¹⁷⁷ founded — or, perhaps, expanded/refounded — in 903 in the same district on the southern shore of Lake Sewan.¹⁷⁸ Tat'ewi vank', enlarged already in 839, had its spiritual prestige bolstered even more with the discovery of a piece of the True Cross and a reliquary commissioned to house it bestowed upon the monastery in 881.¹⁷⁹ A number of important relics were also housed there contributing to its unparalleled prestige in the region established by the late ninth/early tenth century.¹⁸⁰ The construction of the main church, the kat'olikē, was begun in 895 and completed in 906 in grand ceremony,¹⁸¹ and expansion of its estate holdings increased throughout the tenth century, as Siwni princes lavishly endowed it in an effort to make it their new spiritual center to compete with the rising influence of the monastery of Sewan (and in the ¹⁷⁵ Maksoudian, "A Note on the Monasteries," 213–14; Mahé, Grégoire de Narek; Tragédie, 8–9; Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 185–86.

¹⁷⁶ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 809, p. 143.

¹⁷⁷ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 712, p. 126.

¹⁷⁸ Maksoudian, "A Note on the Monasteries," 213. For the location of these two monasteries, see Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 91, p. 115.

¹⁷⁹ This actually became the third piece of the True Cross owned by the monastery. See Pogossian, "Relics, Rulers, Patronage," 161.

¹⁸⁰ Pogossian, "Relics, Rulers, Patronage," 159–62.

¹⁸¹ The list of attendees reads like a who's who of early tenth century political and religious nobility. See Pogossian, "Relics, Rulers, Patronage," 161–62.

wake of the decline of Mak' enoc'), which was under Bagratuni patronage.¹⁸² Also in Siwnik', Xotakerac' (K'arkop'i vank'¹⁸³) was founded in the late ninth or early tenth century, Vahannavank'¹⁸⁴ in 911, Gndevank'¹⁸⁵ in 936, and C'axac'k'ari vank'¹⁸⁶ in the second quarter of the tenth century in the district of Vayoc' Jor.¹⁸⁷

After Sewanay vank', monastic foundations and building activity continued apace in the Bagratid realm. Mention could be made of Kamrĵajor vank' (Zōra vank'),¹⁸⁸ founded in the seventh century and refounded/enlarged in the second quarter of the tenth century, and Kapoytak'ari vank',¹⁸⁹ founded ca. 950, both of them in the district of Aršarunik' in the south of Bagratid Armenia during the reign of Abas I Bagratuni (r. 929 – 953).¹⁹⁰ Also during the reign of Abas, in the district of Širak in the heart of Bagratid Armenia, Hořomos Monastery¹⁹¹ was founded ca. 930 not far from the future Bagratid capital of Ani and in the same district Dprevank'¹⁹² was enlarged in the same period.¹⁹³ The significant foundations in the western spheres of Bagratid influence include S. Grigor of Xlajor¹⁹⁴ ca. 930 in the district of Derĵan, ¹⁸² Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 209–11; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 94, p. 118.

¹⁸³ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 644, p. 115.

¹⁸⁴ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 704, p. 125.

¹⁸⁵ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 638, p. 114.

¹⁸⁶ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 640, p. 115. See Step'anos Tarōnec'i Asoĵik, Universal History III.7, MH 15:752.34, tr. Greenwood, 22. French translation in Mahé, Grégoire de Narek; Tragédie, 12.

¹⁸⁷ Maksoudian, "A Note on the Monasteries," 213; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 94, p. 118.

¹⁸⁸ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 317, p. 59.

¹⁸⁹ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 318, p. 60.

¹⁹⁰ See Universal History III.7, MH 15:750–54.19–56, tr. Greenwood, 224–30. French translation in Mahé, Grégoire de Narek; Tragédie, 9–13.

¹⁹¹ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 313, p. 59. On this monastery, see Vardanyan, Hořomos Monastery.

¹⁹² Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 975, p. 173. A monastic community had existed there at least as early as the seventh century.

¹⁹³ Step'anos Tarōnec'i Asoĵik, Universal History III.7, MH 15:751–52.25–3, tr. Greenwood, Universal History, 225–27. French translation in Mahé, Grégoire de Narek; Tragédie, 9–12.

¹⁹⁴ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 199, p. 38.

Karmir Vank¹⁹⁵ in 936 in the village of Hink¹⁹⁶ in the district of Karin, and Movsisavank¹⁹⁶ (S. Gēorg of Xulē, Xulēvank¹⁹⁷) refounded around the same time in the district of Karberd (Xarberd).¹⁹⁷ Abas' successor, Ašot III Olormac 'The Merciful' (r. 953 – 977), continued the ambitious program of religious building, notably with two important monastic centers founded in the northeastern region of Bagratid Armenia in the district of Lori, Sanahin¹⁹⁸ in 965 and Hałbat¹⁹⁹ in 966.²⁰⁰ Not far to the south, Hałarjin²⁰¹ was established in 966. In the late tenth and throughout the eleventh century, Sanahin and Hałbat formed the spiritual center of the Kiwrikeans, a Bagratid line that established and ruled over the kingdom of Lori-Tašir (Tašir-Joraget).²⁰² This pattern of heightened building activity continued until the later stages of the Byzantine expansion and Seljuk invasions of the eleventh century.

A recent study by Zaroui Pogossian has drawn attention to several of the factors at play in the foundation of Sewanavank¹⁹⁵ and how it is paradigmatic of the way in which monasteries in the period were used to bolster a family's regional prestige.²⁰³ Thus, a closer look will be helpful for understanding the foundation of Narekavank¹⁹⁵ in light of these broader regional processes.

The project was a joint venture between the Bagratuni house — with the involvement of Ašot and his daughter Mariam, widow of the Siwni prince of Gełak¹⁹⁵unik¹⁹⁵ (also spelled

¹⁹⁵ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 212, p. 40; Oskean, Bardzr Hayk'i Vank'erē, 125–40.

¹⁹⁶ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 119, p. 24.

¹⁹⁷ Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:751–52.28–34, tr. Greenwood, 226–27. French translation in Mahé, Grégoire de Narek; Tragédie, 11–12. This monastery was in fact in the confines of the Byzantine Empire at the time of its founding. See Maksoudian, "Note on the Monasteries," 209. But since its founder Movsēs was from the district of Tarōn, which was then still a Bagratid principality, it is appropriate to consider it here.

¹⁹⁸ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 758, p. 134. See Ghalpakhtchian, Il complesso monastico di Sanahin.

¹⁹⁹ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 760, p. 135. See Mnats'akanyan, Il complesso monastico di Haghbat.

²⁰⁰ Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.8, MH 15:755.1–8, tr. Greenwood, 231–32.

²⁰¹ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 681, p. 121.

²⁰² Hews, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, p. 114, map 95, p. 119.

²⁰³ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan."

Gelark'unik') Vasak Gabur — and the Siwni nobility of Gelak'unik'.²⁰⁴ The Siwni, as mentioned, were one of the most prominent naxarardoms of the late ninth to early eleventh centuries, of third importance in the period after the Bagratuni and Arcruni. Long known for secessionist tendencies, an autonomous Siwni kingdom would be established about a century later. In the current phase of relations, the Bagratuni were seeking to make ties with Siwni nobility, while also looking to extend their influence across the Armenian realm. In this regard, there was a geographic importance to the location of the monastery (the northwestern portion of Lake Sewan) in light of the power politics at play in the period. Gelak'unik', which included Lake Sewan, was the Siwni border district separating the Siwni heartland located to the South and East from Bagratid territory to the North and West.²⁰⁵ A monastic foundation was one among other soft power strategies, including relic patronage and marriage alliances with other prominent Armenian noble families, especially the Siwni and Arcruni, that the Bagratids employed in an effort to extend their influence.²⁰⁶

Siwnik', as mentioned, already had its own important monastic centers, including the renowned monastery of Mak'enoc' (Mak'enoc'ac' vank')²⁰⁷ also located in Gelak'unik' to the southeast of Lake Sewan and so further from the Bagratuni realm, and the rising monastic center of Tat'ew (Tat'ew vank'),²⁰⁸ even further to the South and East in Siwnik'.²⁰⁹ Such spiritual centers brought prestige and were sources of soft power for the Siwni nobles who patronized

²⁰⁴ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 185–86.

²⁰⁵ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 186–87; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 87, p. 111.

²⁰⁶ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 187–91.

²⁰⁷ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 768, p. 136.

²⁰⁸ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 666, p. 119.

²⁰⁹ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 193; 208–13; Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 105, p. 125.

them, helping to bolster their rule and legitimacy vis-à-vis their competitive peers. Founding the monastery at Sewan was a way for the Bagratunis to compete with these other religious centers in Siwnik', which could only work effectively if Sewanay vank' became a renowned center in its own right, to rival the prestige of Mak'enoc' and later Tat'ew. The motivation for the local Siwni prince of Gelak'unik' to have such an illustrious monastery in one's own district, was of course that it would give him a boost in his more local competition with rival Siwni princes to the South and East.

In order to bolster the prestige of the monastery of Sewan vis-à-vis the monasteries of Mak'enoc' and Tat'ew, the Bagratuni sought to enhance it through both economic and spiritual means. The Bagratunis provided for the economic security of the monastery by making significant endowments to it. These donations included five villages on the banks of Lake Sewan, privileges to the prime hunting location of Krakcin, and vineyards in Garni, Erevan, and elsewhere.²¹⁰ Furthermore, the monastery was located not far from one of the important trade routes of this period, the one connecting Dabīl/Duin with Bardh'a/Partaw, and thus its own positioning as well as that of its endowed holdings likely meant that it benefited economically from the increased traffic and business in the area.²¹¹ Perhaps just as significant was its location on an island, which would have protected it from plundering and attacks, like how Gagik chose Aht'amar to build his great palace and church. The remote nature of the island monastery also of course made it a fit venue for spiritual activity.

They bestowed spiritual prestige upon it in a number of ways, first of all through the donation of relics and precious objects. During a visit in 882, the prince of princes Ašot bestowed upon the monastery a Byzantine cross luxuriously clad in gold and precious stones, which had been given to him by Emperor Basil I.²¹² As with the Arcruni examples mentioned above, precious objects such as these as well as relics of saints or fragments of the True Cross were important tools in heightening the spiritual prestige of a church or monastery. This would in turn reflect positively on the ruler who bestowed the gift and could be used to secure or assert political influence over a territory. It also promoted pilgrimage and thus would generate income, for example in the form of pilgrim donations for prayers or the sponsorship of liturgies to be said in their name at the site.

²¹⁰ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 203.

²¹¹ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 204–08.

Next, they convinced one of the most celebrated holy men of the day, an ascetic named Maštoc', to become the monastery's first abbot.²¹³ Maštoc' was from a family of priestly pedigree, and was himself educated in the renowned monastery of Mak'enoc', who had then lived an ascetic life of the prestigious anchoretic variety for thirty-three years, becoming renowned after the Near Eastern pattern of eremitic holy men,²¹⁴ before becoming abbot of the monastery of Sewan at age sixty.²¹⁵ This is the same Maštoc' who became catholicos at the end of his life (897–898), through the influence of Bagratuni King Smbat. Apart from the interlude of Arcruni influence, it is striking how connected the monastery of Sewanavank' was to the catholical throne in this period. Three more monks issuing from the monastery of Sewan or with close connection to Maštoc' attained the position of catholicos after him: Yovhannēs Drasxanakert'i "the Historian" (sed. 898 – 924), who was probably educated by Maštoc' himself, Step'anos III Sewanc'i (sed. 970 – 972/3), who was one-time abbot of the monastery of ²¹² Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 186, 197, 203.

²¹³ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 192–201.

²¹⁴ See the classic article on the topic, Brown, "Rise and Function of the Holy Man."

²¹⁵ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 193.

Sewan, and Sargis Sewanc'ı (sed. 992 –1019).²¹⁶ Other prominent clerics and bishops also issued from the monastery.²¹⁷

The spiritual prestige of a monastery was thus manifested not only in precious objects and relics of the holy dead but in the bodies of the holy men associated with the monastery. One of the features that marks Step'anos Tarōnec'ı's description of religious life in this period is the close association he makes between ascetics, virtuous abbots, and learned vardapets with each of the monastic foundations he describes, such as Yovhannēs, Polykarpos, and Samuēl with Kamrjajor, Yovhannēs with Hořomos, and Sion with S. Grigor of Xlajor, to cite just a few examples.²¹⁸ In a striking passage, after detailing the famous holy men, ascetics, and vardapets of the age, Step'anos gives a glimpse of the profound impression they left upon him personally: “In our youth we saw some of these in their old age with our own eyes, tasting the sweet delights of their words.”²¹⁹ Step'anos had personally met some of the men of the age he chronicles and the great monasteries in which they lived, and also heard tales about their founding from older monastics he knew. In this passage, we get a glimpse of the kind of spiritual influence and power that was located in the bodies of the holy men that populated the new cenobitic structures, transferring their sanctity to those spaces.

Returning to Narek in light of these paradigmatic exempla, one can see how King Gagik's arranging for the relocation of Anania and Petros from monasteries in Bagratid Armenia to the newly established Narekavank' in Vaspurakan nearby the political and ecclesiastical ²¹⁶ Pogossian, “Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan,” 199.

²¹⁷ Pogossian, “Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan,” 199–200.

²¹⁸ See Universal History III.7, MH 15:750–54.19–56, tr. Greenwood, 224–30. French translation in Mahé, Grégoire de Narek; Tragédie, 9–13.

²¹⁹ Զոմանս ի սոցանէ ի ծերութեան իւրեանց՝ ի տղայութեան մերում տեսաք աչաւք մերովք՝ ճաշակելով ի քաղցր ճաշակաց բանից նոցա: Universal History III.7, MH 15:754.53, tr. Greenwood, 229.

capital of Ostan and Aht'amar, could have been perceived as a kind of spiritual theft from the Bagratids. It is also of course possible that Anania was encouraged or persuaded to come to Vaspurakan because of his family connection with the influential tenth-century bishop of Anjewac'ik' in Vaspurakan, Xosrov. Anania's paternal cousin was married to Xosrov, before he was ordained bishop. Moving to Narek, of course, must also have been an appealing advancement or promotion for two early career vardapets such as Petros and Anania. Coming to lead a newly established monastery right near the current ecclesiastical and political capital of Armenia would have meant access to unparalleled resources put at their disposal in order to build up the monastery into a flourishing center of intellectual and spiritual activity. This would have involved the ability to acquire or arrange for the copying of many manuscripts to fill the monastery's library. Judging from the works available to Anania and Grigor, who was sent as a child to the monastery shortly after his mother's death, the library was soon built up to include all the most important philosophical and patristic works available in Armenian.²²⁰

THE FOUNDATION OF NAREKAVANK': THE AGENTS AND THE DATE

It is sometimes stated in contemporary scholarly discourse on the topic that Anania founded Narek monastery.²²¹ It is important to distinguish two types of founding — arranging the financial backing and endowment for the monastery and building its infrastructure on the one hand and instituting and directing its material, spiritual, liturgical, and intellectual affairs on the other. The former belongs to the naxarar dynasts and the latter to the abbots. As for Narek, as I have attempted to demonstrate in this study, the idea to found Narek monastery likely came from ²²⁰ For an idea of the kind of texts available to Anania's protégé Grigor, see, Terian, "Gregory of Narek," 280–83.

²²¹ See, for example, Mahé, "L'église arménienne," 515.

King Gagik himself and was funded and built at his order to be a spiritual center near his political and ecclesiastical capital. Responsibility for the latter, like in the case above with Yovhannēs at Mahrast, fell to Anania in his role as the monastery’s first abbot. The vark‘ corroborates this latter point: “And when many monks had gathered into the monastery, then they constrained him and appointed him as leader of the holy congregation to regulate the brothers according to his knowledge and prudence.”²²² In this sense, he was the monastery’s spiritual founder, but it is important to also note that he was likely not the one who made the decision to have it built. That was most likely accomplished through the vision and resources of the Arcruni king, Gagik.

The foundation of Narekavank‘ can thus be interpreted as part of a coordinated effort of Gagik Arcruni to consolidate Armenian political, ecclesiastical, and cultural capital around the domain of R̥štunik‘ in Vaspurakan, representing the spiritual and intellectual side of this matrix. Narek was founded after the building of the palace and Church of the Holy Cross and the relocation of the catholicate to Ałt‘amar, which events took place in the 910s–920s. Founding Narek meant establishing a major new monastic and spiritual center near Ałt‘amar — not just building up and expanding ones formerly founded and patronized by other southern houses as was the case with Hogeac‘ Vank‘ in Anjewac‘ik‘ or Varag monastery in R̥štunik‘ — and thus in the heart of Arcruni Vaspurakan to add spiritual prestige and influence to the political and ecclesiastical capital. The building of a new spiritual center just a few kilometers from Ałt‘amar Island by two prestigious vardapets would have united a powerful spiritual center to the ecclesiastical and political center already established on Ałt‘amar in the persons of the catholicoi and King Gagik. Inviting two famous vardapets, Anania and Petros, who before were residing southern Bagratid districts, is a further example of the way in which Gagik co-opted resources and institutions from the Bagratid realm and patronized or sponsored their relocation and residence in close proximity to his political center.

²²² Եւ ի ժողովիլ բազմաց միանձանց. ի վանսն հարկեալ զնա կացուցին առաջնորդ ս[ուր]բ ուխտին կարկառորել գեղբարսն ըստ գիտութե[ան] եւ ըստ խոհեմութե[ան] իւրոյ: Yaystamawurk‘, M 7359, 183r.

I emphasize this at length because a strand of previous scholarship has ascribed the agency of founding Narek monastery not to the joint cooperation of King Gagik with Anania and Petros but instead to Armenian monks fleeing Byzantine anti-miaphysite persecution during the reign of Romanos I Lekapenos (r. 920–944). These monks are then said to have fled into the Bagratid and Arcrunid realms and founded a number of monasteries during the reign of Abas I Bagratuni (r. 929–953), the most famous of which are listed by Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i. As observed in a study by Krikor Maksoudian, the dubious correlation between persecutions during the reign of the Byzantine emperor and the founding of the monasteries mentioned in Tarōnec‘i’s History seems to have its origin in the works of two thirteenth-century historians, Kirakos Ganjakec‘i and Vardan Arewelc‘i, through a misreading of Tarōnec‘i.²²³

The locus classicus for the foundation of monasteries in the tenth century is the Universal History of Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i (Asohik). Tarōnec‘i’s History was completed in the year 1004/5 and presented to its commissioner, Catholicos Sargis Sewanc‘i (sed. 992/3 – 1019).²²⁴ It is the only contemporary history to provide details about the monastic foundations and famous monks and vardapets of the period. In fact, Tarōnec‘i devotes a great deal of attention to such subjects. He was educated in a monastic community in his youth,²²⁵ and makes much of his personal acquaintance with many of the famous monks and vardapets of the era.²²⁶ He also visited and stayed in different monasteries in order to conduct the research necessary to compose his history. The information he provides on monastic foundations of the period is thus generally reliable, in many cases being based on first-hand experience.

²²³ Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries.”

²²⁴ Greenwood, Universal History, 1–7.

²²⁵ Greenwood, Universal History, 3–4.

The seventh and eighth chapters of his History include detailed information about a number of monasteries founded in Armenia during the reigns of Bagratuni kings Abas I (929–953) and Ašot III Ołormac ‘The Merciful’ (953 – 977).²²⁷ In the chapters, Tarōnec‘i mentions twelve different monasteries founded in the period, most of them in northern, western, and eastern Armenia, Narek being the sole example from Vaspurakan. When it comes to narrating events of the tenth century, Tarōnec‘i tends to focus on events that concern the Bagratuni realms and organizes his chronology based on the reigns of Bagratuni kings as well as the reigns of catholicoi and Byzantine emperors. Therefore, it is not surprising that monasteries in Vaspurakan are mostly absent, with Narekavank‘ alone receiving light coverage. The fact that Narekavank‘ was the only southern monastery mentioned by him signals its wide renown and also perhaps the memory of Anania and Petros as monks who dwelt in monasteries in the Bagratuni realm before they went south to Narek.

Nowhere in these chapters or elsewhere in his history does Tarōnec‘i mention a persecution of Armenian monks having taken place in the Byzantine Empire during the reign of Emperor Romanos Lekapenos. In fact, one of the monasteries mentioned by Tarōnec‘i, Movsisavank‘ (S. Gēorg of Xulē, Xulēvank‘)²²⁸ was refounded in Karberd (Xarberd), which at the time was within the confines of the Byzantine Empire, something that would seemingly have been impossible if there was a policy of persecution of non-Chalcedonian Armenian monks instituted at that time.²²⁹ As Maksoudian noted, had there been a multitude of Armenian clergy fleeing religious persecution in the 930s or 940s from the Byzantine Empire and involved in the founding of the monasteries, Tarōnec‘i, “a staunch anti-Chalcedonian historian” would certainly have mentioned it.²³⁰ In later sections of his history, he spares no ink in discussing theological controversies and ecclesiastical conflicts between the imperial and Armenian churches. As the English translator of his history, historian Tim Greenwood has noted, Tarōnec‘i’s history reveals “a clear antipathy to Byzantium,” writing as he is in the wake of the ecclesiastical persecutions of the late tenth century and the Byzantine expansion into western and central Armenia, where Tarōnec‘i, as his nisbah indicates, came from.²³¹ Nor is there any mention of such persecutions during the reign of Lekapenos in any other Byzantine or Armenian historian or other source from the period.²³²

²²⁶ Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:754.53, tr. Greenwood, 229.

²²⁷ Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7–8, MH 15:749–58, tr. Greenwood, 222–36.

²²⁸ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 119, p. 24.

In fact, the period following the synod of Širakawan in 862/3, up until the renewal of Byzantine political expansion into Armenian territory in the second half of the tenth century has been noted by modern scholars as one of those rare periods of history that was generally marked by positive relations between the Byzantine and Armenian churches.²³³ Evidence may be found in the correspondence of King Gagik with the Patriarch of Constantinople Nicholas Mystikos and Emperor Romanos Lekapenos, showing cooperative activity at the very time that such ²²⁹ Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 209.

²³⁰ Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 210.

²³¹ Greenwood, Universal History, vii.

²³² Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 204.

²³³ On this council and its aftermath, see Maksoudian, “The Chalcedonian Issue;” Dorfmann-Lazarev, Christ in Armenian Tradition, 293–313; idem, Arméniens et Byzantins à l’époque de Photius; Mahé, “L’église arménienne,” 490. See further the fifth chapter of the present study.

persecutions were supposed to have taken place, as well as later evidence from the De ceremoniis, revealing diplomatic relations between the Roman Emperor with the Armenian kingdoms and princedoms up through the mid-tenth century.²³⁴ The Syrian and Armenian immigrants welcomed into the newly acquired territory of Cappadocia in this period, discussed in the last chapter, is also indicative of the generally peaceable relations of the time. It is only in the latter part of the tenth century that the sources indicate confessional tension in those regions, which will be discussed in the fifth chapter.

As Maksoudian observed, the confusion seems to have arisen from Tarōnec‘i’s description of the founding of the first monastery he mentioned, that of Kamrjajor in the district of Aršarunik‘ “[whose] leader was father Yovhannēs who had been expelled from the western country, from the district of Egerac‘ik‘, by Chalcedonian man-confessing heretics who accepted only the humanity of Christ.”²³⁵ It seems that the thirteenth-century historians mentioned above, Kirakos Ganjakec‘i and Vardan Arewelc‘i, were unfamiliar with the location Egerac‘ik‘, and taking their clues from the phrase “western country” had supposed it to be a province of the Byzantine Empire. Thus, Kirakos writes:

And after him Romanos [became emperor]. He persecuted all the Armenian clergy and priests who were in the land of the Greeks, since they did not accept the doctrine of Chalcedon. And coming to the land of Armenia at the time of Abas son of Smbat, they established monasteries: Kamrjajor, Kaputk‘ar in the district of Aršarunik‘, and the renowned monastery called Hořomos, and Dprevank‘ in the district of Širak. They also built a church in the name of the All Holy Theotokos in the monastery called Sanahin within the confines of the city of Lōřē. And since the elders were called hořomoc‘ erēc‘

²³⁴ Greenwood, “Armenian Neighbors,” 354–55; Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 204. For the correspondence, see Nicholas Mystikos, Letters, no. 139, pp. 446–51, Book of Letters–1, 295–301; Book of Letters–2, 540–49. For the relevant passage in the De ceremoniis, see Constantine VII Porphyrogenitus, De ceremoniis aulae Byzantinae II.48. For an updated Greek edition and extensive analysis, see Martin-Hisard, “Constantinople et les archontes.”

²³⁵ որոյ առաջնորդ հայր Յովհաննէս, որ հալածեալ յարեւմտեայ աշխարհէն, յԵգերացւոց գաւառէն, ի քաղկեդոնական մարդադաւան աղանդիցն: Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:750.19, tr. Greenwood, Universal History, 224.

[“elders of the Greeks”], the one monastery in Širak was named Hořomoc‘ monastery, which is still to this day called Hořomec‘i monastery.²³⁶

Vardan Arewelc‘i’s passage is similar and reads as follows:

At his [King Abas’s] time a large multitude of clerics who were driven out of the land of the Greeks for their orthodoxy came to our land [where] they built many monasteries: first Kamrjajor, and then the monastery called Hořomos, presumably because they came from the regions of the Greeks, and the Dpravank‘. The Holy Theotokos [Church] at Sanahin is said to have been built by them.²³⁷

The two historians were contemporaries and schoolmates, and thus likely familiar with one another’s work — it seems Vardan’s was completed prior to that of Kirakos’ — which explains the close correlation between these two passages.²³⁸ All these monasteries were among those mentioned above by the tenth/eleventh-century historian Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, and so it is evident that they are using Tarōnec‘i’s history as their source here, especially since no other known source of the time includes such details about the foundation of monasteries. Egerac‘ik‘, which the two historians seem to have presumed was located in Byzantine territory, in fact is in western Iberia, which at the time was part of the kingdom of Abasgia/Abkhazia, where Christological conflicts took place between Chalcedonians and non-Chalcedonians during the reign of King Abas Bagratuni and the Abasgian prince Bēr, as mentioned in an earlier part of the same chapter of Tarōnec‘i’s History that describes the foundation of monasteries.²³⁹ It seems then that due to Kirakos and Vardan’s unfamiliarity with the region of Egerac‘ik‘ and their misunderstanding of the reference of “western country” coupled with the fact that ecclesiastical conflict between the Armenian and imperial church surfaced in the latter half of the tenth century — on which more in chapter five — they assumed that Yovhannēs, abbot of Kamrjajor, had fled from Byzantine territory due to anti-miaphysite persecutions there. Then they must have assumed the same circumstances were at play in the founding of the other monasteries in the period. Kirakos and Vardan likewise claimed that the origin of the name of the renowned Hořomos monastery was due to the fact that its founders were Roman priests/elders (hořomoc‘eric‘unk‘). This view was questioned by Maksoudian, who called it a folk etymology.²⁴⁰

²³⁶ Translation modified from Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 205–06. [Թումանոս] հալածեաց զամենայն կրօնաւորս եւ զքահանայս հայոց, որք էին յաշխարհին Հռոմոց, զի ո՛չ հաւանեցան դաւանութեանն Քաղկեդոնի: Եւ եկեալ յաշխարհս Հայոց յաւուրս Աբասայ, որդւոյ Սմբատայ, հաստատեցին վանորայս՝ զԿամրջաձոր, եւ զԿապուտքարն ի դաւառին Արշարունեաց, եւ զհռչականունն Հռոմոսին կոչեցեալ վանք, եւ զԴպրակ վանք ի Շիրակ դաւառին. շինեցին եւ եկեղեցի մի յանուն ամենասուրբ Աստուածածնին ի վանքն, որ կոչի Սանահին, ի սահմանս Լուէ քաղաքին, եւ զի կոչէին զերիցունսն հռոմոց երէց, անուանեցին զմի վանքն, որ ի Շիրակ՝ Հռոմոց վանք, որ ցարդ եւս ասի Հռոմեցի վանք: Kirakos Ganjakec‘i, History of Armenia, 84–85.

²³⁷ Translated in Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 206. Ի սորա աւուրս յոյժ բազմութիւնք կրօնաւորաց հալածեալք ՚ի Հռոմոց աշխարհէն սակս ուղղափառութեան, եկեալ յաշխարհս մեր շինեցին յոյով վանորայս: Նախ զԿամրջաձոր, եւ ապա զՀռոմոսին կոչեցեալ վանք, որպէս թէ ՚ի Հռոմոց կողմանցն եկին, եւ զԴպրակ վանքն. ՚ի նոցանէ ասեն շինեալ զՍանահին սուրբ Աստուածածինն: Vardan Arewelc‘i, Compilation of Armenian History, 88

²³⁸ One of them was likely dependent upon the other or they may have had a shared source for the passage in question. See Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 205–06.

Vardan and Kirakos’ misinterpretation entered modern historiography first in the monumental three-volume History of Armenia, written by the Mkhit‘arist monk and father of modern Armenian history Mik‘ayēl Ch‘amch‘ean, published between 1774–1776, and modern scholarship has frequently repeated this view.²⁴¹ As Maksoudian notes, Ch‘amch‘ean sometimes failed to distinguish premodern primary from secondary sources, and thus, in some cases, instead of favoring the most reliable primary source (in this case Tarōnec‘i’s History) attempted to synthesize the different and at times contradictory information arising in historians of later periods (in this case, Vardan’s and Kirakos’ histories) with earlier, more reliable ones.²⁴² In the section of his History that treats the foundation of monasteries during the reign of King Abas, ²³⁹ Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 211–12.

²⁴⁰ Եւ գի կոչէին գերիցունսն հռոմոց երէց, անուանեցին զմի վանքն, որ ի Շիրակ՝ Հռոմոց վանք: Kirakos Ganjakec‘i, History of Armenia, 85. See Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 206.

²⁴¹ I will mention some of the most significant studies that played a part in the general acceptance of Kirakos’ and Vardan’s erroneous claim.

²⁴² Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 205. For a critical assessment of Ch‘amch‘ean’s historiographical methodology, see Nichanian, “Enlightenment and Historical Thoughts.”

Ch‘amch‘ean thus includes the thirteenth-century claim that monks persecuted by the Byzantines came to Armenia and built the monasteries, likewise singling out Hořomos in this regard, and repeating the etymology mentioned above.²⁴³ Motivated either by the same source — or perhaps by the evidence that there seems to have been knowledge of Greek at the monastery, as evidenced in the works of Anania and Grigor²⁴⁴ — Ch‘amch‘ean makes the claim that some of the monks who gathered at Narek had been educated in the eastern regions of the Byzantine Empire and trained in (Greek) philosophy.²⁴⁵ This seems to be a compelling possibility, to which I will return below.

One of the characteristics of Ch‘amch‘ean’s History is to include in the margin of each section a date as to when the events he is describing occurs. In many cases, this is little more than a general approximation. As for the founding of Narek monastery, there is a marginal date of 935. This date became a mainstay in the literature on the founding of Narek monastery, even though the date has never been justified or argued for. It seems to have been an estimation due to the dates of Emperor Romanos I Lekapenos’ reign (920–944) and that of King Abas I (929–953), ²⁴³ Կային զայսու ժամանակաւ եւ այլ բազում կրօնաւորք յ[աշխարհ]ին եզերացւոց յազգէն հայոց՝ ո՛չ իբր փախտեայք, այլ իբր բնակք ՚ի նախնեաց իւրեանց: Եւ ս[ո]ք[ա] յայնմ ժ[ա]մ[անա]կի վ[ա]ս[ն] իրիք դիպուածոյ պատճառաւ ս[ո]ւրբ ժողովոյն քաղկեդոնի հայածե[ա]լք ՚ի հռոմոց՝ եկին ՚ի հայս, եւ շինեցին զվանորայս: ... Սոյնպէս եւ այլ ոմն յովհաննէս վ[ա]րդ[ա]պ[ետ], որ բազում կրօնաւորք վարեալ էր յ[աշխարհ]էն հռոմոց, եկեալ ՚ի շիրակ գաւառ՝ շինեաց զվանսն կոչեցեալ հռոմոսին: ... Զայսմ վանաց ասէ կիրակոս, թէ վ[ա]ս[ն] այն կոչեցաւ հռոմոսին, զի բնակիչքն կոչէին երիցունք հռոմոց այ[ս]ինքն) եկեալք ՚ի հռոմոց: Իսկ այլք ասեն, թէ վ[ա]ս[ն] զի փախուցեալ ՚ի հռոմոց հասին ն[ո]ք[ա] անդ, վ[ա]ս[ն] այն՝ եւ վանքն հռոմոսին կոչեցաւ, իբր թէ հռոմհասին: Ch‘amch‘ean, Patmut‘ iwn Hayots‘, 2:823–24.

²⁴⁴ On knowledge of Greek at the monastery, specifically regarding Anania and Grigor, see Yarnley, “Armenian Philhellenes;” Cowe, “Renewal of the Debate,” 250–51. On Xosrov Anjewac‘i’s (Grigor’s father’s) knowledge of Greek, see Cowe, “Introduction” in Xosrov Anjewac‘i, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy, 6–9, 71.

²⁴⁵ Ի սմին ժ[ա]մ[անա]կի շինեցաւ եւ վանքն նարեկայ ՚ի գաւառին ուշտունեաց. յորում ժողովեցան բազմութիւնք ճգնազգեաց արանց, եւս եւ ուսերոց ոմանց յ[աշխարհ]ին յունաց, եւ վարժերոց յիմաստս փրկիստփայտութե[ան]: Ch‘amch‘ean, Patmut‘ iwn Hayots‘, 2:824. Neither Kirakos nor Vardan mentioned the founding of Narek monastery in their brief summaries of the monastic foundations in this period.

and perhaps also because Narek monastery is mentioned rather early (third) in the sequence of monasteries mentioned by Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i in his History.²⁴⁶

From Ch‘amch‘ean onwards, the connection of the founding of Narek (and the other monasteries mentioned by Asolik in this period) with Byzantine persecution and non-Chalcedonian monks fleeing into the Armenian realm and also the date of the founding of Narek monastery at 935 came generally to be repeated unquestioned in most subsequent secondary literature on the topic. I will mention some of the most significant and oft-cited studies in this regard. In 1819, Jean Saint-Martin, provided 935 as the date of the founding of Narek monastery, likely plucking the date out of the margin of Ch‘amch‘ean’s History, and without providing any explanation or justification for so doing.²⁴⁷ The Mkhit‘arist monk Ghukas Inchichean in his Description of Ancient Armenia published in 1822, associated the founding of Narek monastery with the relocation of monks persecuted by the Byzantines.²⁴⁸

In the early twentieth century, Maghak‘ia Ōrmanean, in his monumental National History, cited the alleged Chalcedonian persecutions ordered by Emperor Romanos Lekapenos and the subsequent fleeing of monks from the Empire into Armenian territory as a primary cause for the new monastic foundations and general monastic flourishing of that era.²⁴⁹ Ōrmanean does ²⁴⁶ It is possible that Ch‘amch‘ean supposed Asolik’s list was roughly chronological. For the founding of the first and second monasteries listed by Asolik, Kamtjajor and Hořomos, the date in the margin is 934. For Narek and some of the following ones, the date moves to 935. See Ch‘amch‘ean, Patmut‘iwn Hayots‘, 2:823–24.

²⁴⁷ Saint-Martin, Mémoires historiques et géographiques, 2:428–49, 466, n. 93.

²⁴⁸ Շիրնեցաւ այս մենաստան [sc. Նարեկ] ՚ի նմին ժ. դարու ՚ի կրօնաւորաց հայոց բնակելոց ՚ի փոքր հայս, ուստի հայածեալ ՚ի յունաց՝ աստ եւ անդ ՚ի մեծն հայս շիրնեցին միայնարանս: Inchichean, Storagrut‘iwn hin hayastaneayts‘, 171.

²⁴⁹ Ինչ որ մեր պատմութեան հետ կապ ունի, Ռոմանոսի կրօնական նախանձաշուքութիւնն է, որ Ասիոյ մէջ ունեցած յաջողութիւններէն խրոխտացած, սկսաւ կայսերութեան սահմանին մէջ եղող Հայերը քաղկեդոնականութեան ստիպել, մասնաւորապէս իւր խստութիւնը եկեղեցականներու վրայ ծանրացնելով: Այս պատճառաւ բազմութիւնք կրօնաւորաց հալածեալք ի Հոռոմոց աշխարհէն սակա ուղղափառութեան՝ պարտաւորուեցան գլխաւորապէս Արարատի հայկական թագաւորութեան սահմանները գաղթել (ՎԱՐ. 88), եւ Շիրակի եւ Սիւնիքի եւ ուրիշ շրջակայ գաւառներու մէջ վանքեր հիմնել կամ եղածները շէնցնել: Ōrmanean, Azgapatum, 1:1084, §746. Ռոմանոս Ա. Լեկաբենոսի մոլեռանդ հալածումը քաղկեդոնիկ չեղողներու դէմ՝ առիթ

not give hard and fast dates for the founding of most of the monasteries in this era — including Narek — because dates are absent in the relevant ancient sources (Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i’s Universal History), but he suggests that most were probably (re)founded and expanded during the active catholical reign of Anania Mokac‘i (941/2 – ca. 965/6), as opposed to his more reclusive R̥štuni predecessors.²⁵⁰ Ōrmanean organized his History according to the reigns of catholicoi, and in some cases gave excessive agency to catholicoi in the development of historic events. There is in fact no evidence that catholicoi were major actors in the foundation of monasteries in this period. Thus, whether they are remembered in history as strong figures or less active ones has no bearing on the question. As regards the founding and regulation of the monasteries, the primary sources mention naxarar dynasts on the one hand and monastics on the other. Therefore, agency for the founding of most monasteries of the period should be looked for from these classes of society and not in the person of or through the initiative of the catholicos.

In his translation of the Universal History of Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Frédéric Macler also gave the date 935, citing the work of Saint-Martin mentioned above.²⁵¹ Hamazasp Oskean likewise mentions the persecutions of Armenian monks by the Byzantines as a precipitating cause for the foundation of Narek monastery, as also others founded in the same period.²⁵² եղաւ այդ վանականներուն խմբովին Յունական բաժինէն ելլելու եւ Հայագգի մանր թագաւորութեանց սահմաններուն մէջ ցրուելու, որով յանկարծ Հայաստան հասան բազմութիւնք կրօնաւորաց հալածեալք ի Հոռոմոց աշխարհէն սակս ուղղափառութեան (ՎԱՐ. 88), զի ոչ հաւանեցան դաւանութեան Քաղկեդոնի (ԿԻՐ. 47): Ասոնց գալուստը գրկաբաց ընդունուեցաւ Արարատի եւ Վասպուրականի եւ ուրիշ կողմերու Հայագգի թագաւորներէն եւ իշխաններէն, որոնք չափազանց եռանդեամբ փարած էին եկեղեցիներ ու վանքեր հիմնելու եւ պայծառացնելու գործին: Ōrmanean, Azgapatum, 1:1100, §759.

²⁵⁰ Ōrmanean, Azgapatum, 1:1084, §746, 1:1101, §759.

²⁵¹ Macler, Étienne Asolik, 30 n. 7.

²⁵² Նարեկայ վանքի շինութեան առիթ ու պատճառ եղած են հալածանքներ: Փոքր Հայքի մէջ բնակող հայ կրօնաւորները Յոյներէն իրենց կրօնական համոզումներուն համար հալածուելով Ժ. դարուն կու գան Հայաստան եւ հոն քանի մը վանք հիմնելով կը բնակին անոնց մէջ: Այս վանքերէն մէկն ալ է Նարեկ գիւղի մէջ հիմնուած վանքը, որ գիւղին անունովը դարէ դար այդպէս կոչուած է, մինչ իսկական անունը, ինչպէս կը թուի, եղած ըլլալու է՝ Ս. Սանդուխտ կամ Դրուց: Oskean, Vaspurakan-Vani vank‘erē, 194–95.

Hrach‘ya T‘amrazyan, in the only monograph dedicated to Anania’s life and works, repeats the above information, asserting that the founding of Narek monastery — as also the other monasteries cited by Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i — was linked to the persecutions of Emperor Romanos Lekapenos and the immigration of non-Chalcedonian monks to Armenia, and likewise estimated that Narekavank‘ was founded in the 930s, citing Saint-Martin for the 935 date.²⁵³ In 1989, Jean-Michel Thierry also attributed the founding of Narek monastery to monks fleeing Byzantine territory due to persecutions, and said that the monastery was founded in the second half of the tenth century, citing Macler as well as Saint-Martin’s date of 935.²⁵⁴ The oft-cited date of 935 for the foundation of Narek monastery has not otherwise been investigated or justified, even when it has been recognized that it is an approximation.²⁵⁵

Most scholarship after Maksoudian has followed him in his suggestion that rather than a result of monks fleeing persecution from Byzantine territory, the foundation of the monasteries mentioned by Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i was part of a lengthier process that begins with the founding of the monastery of Sewan in 874, and that agency for the founding of these monasteries belongs to “local vardapets and priests who established new monasteries with the help of members of the royal house and feudal clans,” beginning with the monastery of Sewan (Sewanay vank՝) between 871–874,²⁵⁶ a joint Bagratuni and Siwni venture, and continuing through the tenth and into the mid-eleventh century.²⁵⁷ As such, it correlates with the period of the autonomous Armenian princedoms and kingdoms during a period of greater economic flourishing in Armenia. The foundation of the monasteries are closely tied to the activities of the primary princely families of the era, the Bagratuni, Arcruni, and Siwni. This view has been advanced in multiple recent studies.²⁵⁸

²⁵³ Նարեկայ վանքը կառուցուել է X դ. առաջին կեսին, հաւանաբար 30-ական թթ. վերջերին (Փրանսիացի հայագէտ Սէն-Մարտէնը կառուցման տարեթիւը համարում է 935 թուականը): Այն կապուած է մի նշանաւոր պատմական իրադարձութեան հետ, որն, ընդհանրապէս, կարելոր դեր է խաղացել X դարի հայ մշակոյթի պատմութեան մէջ: Խօսքը Ռոմանոս Ա Լեկաբենոս կայսեր օրօք Բիւզանդական կայսրութեան տարածքում եղած հայադաւան հոգեւորականների հալածման մասին է, որի հետեւանքով հոգեւորականների մեծ ներգաղթ տեղի ունեցաւ Հայաստան: Բազրատունեաց եւ Արծրունեաց թագաւորութիւններն իրենց հովանաւորութեան տակ առան այդ շարժումը: Կառուցուեցին բազմաթիւ վանքեր, հիմնուեցին մեծ թուով միաբանութիւններ, որոնք այդ ժամանակից ի վեր հայ գրչութեան եւ մատենագրութեան կենտրոններ դարձան: Այդ նշանաւոր վանքերի թուին են պատկանում Կամրջաձորի, Հոռոմոսի վանքերը, Դպրեվանքը, Նարեկայ, Սանահնի, Հաղբատի վանքերը: T‘amrazyan, “Anania Narekats‘i,” in MH 10:313. In his 1986 monograph, T‘amrazyan had said it was likely founded in the 940s (T‘amrazyan, Anania Narekac‘i, 26), which was apparently a typo, because that date was corrected to the 930s in his later publications that essentially reproduced the same material from the monograph, as cited here and in T‘amrazyan, Grigor Narekats‘in ev Narekian dprots‘e, 2:118.

²⁵⁴ La fondation du couvent de Narek est le fait d’un groupe de moines fuyant les terres byzantines où sévissaient les persécutions chalcédoniennes. Cette migration eut lieu dans le second quart du X^e s. Thierry, Monuments arméniens, 327. In note 146 on the same page, he cites Macler and Saint-Martin for the 935 date.

²⁵⁵ Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 40; Mahé, Histoire de l’Arménie, 160; Greenwood, Universal History, 225 n. 111; Papazian, Doctor of Mercy, 70.

Nevertheless, the idea of Armenian monks fleeing Byzantine persecution in Cappadocia and founding the monasteries mentioned by Tarōnec՝i has persisted in some recent studies.²⁵⁹ For example, in a recent book devoted to Hořomos monastery, Karen Matevosyan claims that the etymology of the monastery, which Maksoudian claimed was nothing more than a folk etymology, is probably valid and thus indeed would attest to the fact that monks did come from Byzantine (East Roman) territory.²⁶⁰ This view is not without merit, and I would like to propose a modified version of it.

As argued above, the evidence points against the idea that miaphysite monks fled anti-miaphysite persecution and founded monasteries (the agency for the founding should be left to

²⁵⁶ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 728, p. 129. On the circumstances surrounding the foundation of this monastery, see Pogossian, “Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan.”

²⁵⁷ Maksoudian, “Note on the Monasteries,” 212–14.

²⁵⁸ Mahé, “L’eglise arménienne,” 514; Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 8–13; Garsořian and Thierry, “L’indépendance retrouvée,” 257; Pogossian, “Foundation of the Moanstery of Sevan;” Pogossian, “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory;” Greenwood, Universal History, 224 n. 103. An exception is Terian, “Gregory of Narek,” 281.

²⁵⁹ See, for example, this view asserted by Karen Matevosyan in regard to Hořomos monastery in Vardanyan, Hořomos Monastery, 20–21 and a similar view expressed by Terian in regard to Narek monastery in Terian, Festal Works, xviii, n. 4; idem, “Gregory of Narek,” 281. Both scholars are aware of Maksoudian’s study.

²⁶⁰ Vardanyan, Hořomos Monastery, 21.

the local lords and vardapets). That, however, does not mean that monks did not come from the Byzantine Empire into Armenia in this period. As mentioned in the previous chapter, this was a time of shifting borders and population movements. The Byzantine expansion eastwards in this period entailed the movement of peoples and the intermingling of Byzantines, Armenians, and Syrians in the eastern portions of the expanding Byzantine empire. As discussed in the previous chapter, Basil I reconquered Sebasteia in 911 and during the reign of Leo VI (886–912), it was incorporated into the empire as a theme. During the reign of Romanos Lekapenos (920–944), the Byzantines captured Melitenē and took control of eastern Cappadocia. Two of the raids of Emperor Romanos' Armeno-Byzantine general John Kourkouas reached as far as Duin, in 922 and 928/9. Armenians and Syrians formed a major part of those who settled these newly reconquered territories and thus contact and communication between Armenians and Byzantines picked up in this period. It is not hard to imagine, or at all unlikely, that with the increased mixing of peoples due to the moving populations, shifting borders, and reopened trade routes connecting Armenia with the Byzantine empire, that monks would have gone from the eastern Byzantine Empire to Armenia or vice versa. Such monks, whether or not they were involved in some way in founding — at least would have contributed to the flourishing of monasteries in this period, perhaps bringing with them Greek texts to enrich the monastic libraries and intellectual-spiritual life. They may have been attracted to the vibrant monastic life and building activity in the Armenian realms in this period, or even have been invited to join certain monasteries. The memory of this could indeed be transmitted in the name of Horomos monastery and perhaps even in the thirteenth-century histories of Kirakos and Vardan.²⁶¹ Another possibility, which is not mutually exclusive with the point just mentioned, is that miaphysite monks fled from Sebasteia/Cappadocia during the 960s–980s, during the Chalcedonian persecutions that took place there in that time, mentioned in the previous chapter and in the context of which Anania penned his Root of Faith. Such monks may indeed have taken refuge in monasteries under the patronage of Bagratuni, Arcruni, or Siwni dynasts. It is possible as well that some came to Narek. Anania and Grigor’s familiarity with Greek and Greek works never known to have been translated to Armenian, if not evidence for the presence of such monks, would at least have made Narek a welcome place for them.

²⁶¹ Vardanyan, Horomos Monastery, 21.

As for the date of Narek’s founding, precision does not seem possible. Step’anos Tarōnec’i mentions its founding during the period covering the reign of Abas I (929–953).²⁶² Therefore, this is a preliminary range for the founding of Kamrjajor, Hořomos, Narek, and the others that he mentions. If Tarōnec’i lists the monasteries in chronological order by founding date — he certainly does not list them according to any kind of geographical scheme²⁶³ — then Narek would be third on a list of nine. However, it is unclear whether the list is meant to be comprehensive or simply representative — i.e., mentioning only the most famous monasteries — and also whether it is arranged chronologically or by means of some other order, or none at all. One might suggest that it is chronological based on the fact that Tarōnec’i seems to signal out Kamrjajor as the first to be built, and the rest then followed after it in chronological order.²⁶⁴ But this is mere conjecture. It is in fact common to not have precise details about the founding date of monasteries from this period. When precise dates do exist, they are usually found as epigraphs engraved on the building in question, or from colophons commemorating the donation of some gift or endowment to the monastery.²⁶⁵ No such source is forthcoming as regards Narek monastery. In cases like this, where no inscription or work is devoted to the purpose, then dates can only be approximate. In most cases, the specific date of a monastery's foundation was not perceived to be as important as the identity of the founder or first abbot and the authority and prestige accrued to the monastery by him as well as subsequent generations of holy men and intellectual leaders.

²⁶² Step’anos Tarōnec’i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:749–64, tr. Greenwood, 222–31.

²⁶³ See Greenwood, Universal History, 227 n. 124.

²⁶⁴ Նախ առաջին՝ մեծահռչակ ուխտն Կամրջաձորոյ ի դաւառին Արշարունեաց: “The first [was] the very renowned community of Kamrjajor in the district of Aršarunik’.” ²⁶⁴ Step’anos Tarōnec’i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:750.19, tr. Greenwood, 224. However, it may be that he is simply rhetorically saying that it is first of those he is going to list, and not the first to be founded chronologically.

Just before Step'anos begins the section dedicated to monastic foundations, he signals that Anania Mokac'i (941/2 – ca. 965/6) was catholicos at the time.²⁶⁶ This may refer first of all to what happened earlier in the chapter — the Chalcedonian conflicts involving Bēr and the Abkhazians — but it may also be meant to signal the time of the monastic foundations. Right after mentioning the reign of Anania Mokac'i, Step'anos continues, “In this time the order of monastic institutions flourished and shone in this country of Armenia, and in several places monasteries were built and those united in their love for Christ came together.”²⁶⁷ Does the “in this time” refer to Abas' reign, to Anania's Mokac'i's catholical reign, or perhaps to those years of Abas' reign that overlapped with the years Anania was catholicos? It seems impossible to say with certainty. If the latter, then this would provide a more limited range of 941/2–953. Some scholars have taken it this way, supposing that Step'anos means to say that the monasteries were founded not only in Abas' reign, but specifically in those years of his reign when Anania was catholicos.²⁶⁸ While I do not think that this can be proven with certainty from the evidence at hand, it also seems impossible to disprove. Nevertheless, as I have mentioned, the foundation of monasteries was an act carried out through the joint collaboration of monastics and the feudal lords/princes/kings, and not so much the catholicos. From the above, one might suggest a possible terminus post quem of 941/2 (the beginning of Anania Mokac'i's reign), but one should not rule out an earlier terminus post quem of 929 (the beginning of Abas' reign).

²⁶⁵ Both kinds of sources exist in the case of Sevan. See Pogossian, “The Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan,” 185 n. 12.

²⁶⁶ Չալսու ժամանակաւ էր յաթող հայրապետութեանն Տէր Անանիա, ամեներջանիկ սրբութեամբ գերապատուեալ, բարեշնորհ իւրոց վիճակելոցն: “At this time lord Anania was on the throne of the patriarchate, revered for his holiness and cherished for his grace by his flock.” Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:750.16, tr. Greenwood, 224.

²⁶⁷ Յայտմ ժամանակի ծաղկեալ պայծառանայր կարգ կրանաւորական հանդիսից յաշխարհիս Հայոց: Եւ ի յորով տեղիս շինեցան եղբայրանոցք, եւ ժողովեցան միաբանակեացք հաւասարականք սիրովն Քրիստոսի: Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:750.17–18, tr. Greenwood, 224.

As for the terminus ante quem of the founding of Narek monastery, we know it pre-dated 950, the date that Xosrov's Commentary on the Divine Liturgy was completed, shortly after his election to bishop of the see of Anjewac'ik'.²⁶⁹ This is because after the death of his wife, Xosrov was elected bishop and sent his two younger sons — Yovhannēs and Grigor — to Narek monastery in the charge of his wife's cousin, Anania.²⁷⁰ This must have taken place in the middle to late 940s, providing a definite terminus ante quem for the founding of Narek monastery and Anania's appointment there as first abbot. In light of the present evidence then, we can estimate a broad date in which Narek was founded, 929 – late 940s, with a possible more narrow date between 941/2–late 940s (if it was indeed founded while Anania Mokac'i was catholicos).

What we can say with certainty is that Narek monastery was founded and Anania appointed its first abbot when the catholicosal see was still at Alt'amar, before Anania Mokac'i relocated from there seven years into his reign, ca. 949, in order to return to the Bagratid realm, ²⁶⁸ See, for example, Maksoudian, "Note on the Monasteries," 207. Ōrmanean also thought this for the reason that I discussed above. See Ōrmanean, Azgapatum, 1:1084, §746, 1:1101, §759.

²⁶⁹ See Cowe, "Biographical Sketch of the Author," in Xosrov Anjewac'i, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy, 4.

²⁷⁰ See Cowe, "Biographical Sketch of the Author," in Xosrov Anjewac'i, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy, 4.

which was resolidifying its position as the center of Armenian political power after the death of Gagik.²⁷¹ If, as I have suggested in this chapter, the decision to found Narek as a spiritual center near Aht'amar came from King Gagik himself, then we may be able to suggest an even earlier terminus post quem, since King Gagik died in 943/4. It is, of course, possible that the idea was his and construction of the monastery began during his reign and was not completed until after his death, in the beginning of the reign of his son and successor Derenik-Ašot (943–953/8), or that the idea to found and sponsor the monastery was entirely that of Derenik-Ašot. But in my view, it seems more likely that it was through the initiative of King Gagik. While a definite date for the founding of the monastery cannot be established, this investigation has at least recovered the essential factors in question and eschewed an irrelevant/fictitious one (the supposed persecutions of Emperor Romanos I Lekapenos). At present, it seems the best one can offer for an approximate date is 930s–940s, as Edda Vardanyan has done in regard to Horomos monastery in her recent edited volume on the monastery.²⁷²

THE NEW CENOBITIC MONASTIC FOUNDATIONS

It is worth highlighting at the end of this chapter what was new about this new phase of monastic foundations of which Narekavank' formed a part. While cenobitic monastic circles with disciples numbering in the tens who gathered around a charismatic leader had long been a feature of religious life in Armenia since late antiquity, the cenobitic institutions founded in this period are distinguished from the earlier ones by their size and scale.²⁷³ They were endowed, permanent foundations many of which, based on textual and archaeological data, are known to have numbered monks in the hundreds.²⁷⁴ These foundations over the centuries turned into monastic complexes that were much larger with many more buildings and a more elaborate structure and populated by many more monks than the rather simple cells (kellia) of an earlier period, which were often marked by circles of followers congregating around a charismatic leader in a simple architectural structure.²⁷⁵ Over the centuries, the monastic complexes often included more than one church, with imposing structures called gawit's or žamatuns later added to the western façade and often larger than the church to which it was attached.²⁷⁶ Resembling native domestic house architecture, the žamatun served a variety of functions for the cenobium.²⁷⁷ These spaces were the site of the performance of the liturgical hours, the resting place of significant monastics, as well as the place to which penitents would be sent during the eucharistic liturgy, and also functioned as a place for other gatherings and meetings, including lectures.²⁷⁸ In addition to churches and chapels, monastic complexes included other buildings to support the physical and intellectual life of the monks living there, including refectories, cells for lodging, schools, libraries, and scriptoria.²⁷⁹ They were thus architecturally and structurally endowed with the means to become centers of both intellectual and spiritual activity, which facilitated their becoming the key venues for cultural production and spiritual experience in medieval Armenia.

²⁷¹ Mahé, Histoire de l'Arménie, 145.

²⁷² Vardanyan, Horomos Monastery, 9.

²⁷³ Cowe, "Armenians in the Era of the Crusades," 411.

²⁷⁴ Cowe, “Armenians in the Era of the Crusades,” 411. Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i records, for example, that Kamrjajor monastery housed 300 monks, while Hałbat and Sanahin together contained some 500. See Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:750.22, III.8, MH 15:755.7, tr. Greenwood, 224–25, 232.

²⁷⁵ Garsoĭan, “Introduction to the Problem.”

²⁷⁶ Garsoĭan, “Introduction to the Problem,” 177–78; Thierry, Monuments arméniens, 97–98.

²⁷⁷ For a recent treatment of the žamatun, its architectural features and its function, see Vardanyan, Hořomos Monastery, 207–236.

²⁷⁸ Thierry, Monuments arméniens, 97–98; Cowe, “Armenians in the Era of the Crusades,” 411.

²⁷⁹ Garsoĭan, “Introduction to the Problem,” 178; Thierry, Monuments arméniens.

As mentioned above, many monasteries — such as Sewanay vank' and Tat'ewi vank' — were endowed with extensive land holdings including both agricultural fields and orchards as well as villages, which served as sources of income to support the physical needs and intellectual and spiritual pursuits of the monks residing there. These endowments made by the ruling elite to monastic complexes were made in perpetuity and therefore were of the same type as those known as waqf in the Islamic context.²⁸⁰ In fact, the use of the Arabic word waqf even begins to appear in the late twelfth century on inscriptions detailing endowments to monasteries made by Armeno-Georgian Bagrationi rulers. The first such instance is dated to an inscription at Sanahin in 1173.²⁸¹ Other monasteries benefited from being located in close proximity to the international trade routes of the period and in turn supplied services to those passing by, such as Horomos monastery, which was known for its hospitality in providing lodging and other sustenance to travelers, merchants, and wayfarers.²⁸² Some monastic centers prospered so greatly in the tenth century in comparison to the lives of the villagers supporting them that we hear of peasant revolts, such as the well-known ones in Siwnik' in different times in the tenth century in connection with Tat'ewi vank'. These were motivated in large part by the increased wealth disparity between those working the land and the monks in the complexes benefitting from their labor and will be discussed in the fourth chapter in connection with the discussion of the T'ondrakite movement.²⁸³ For now, let us turn to an examination of the educational system that Anania founded at Narek, which was one of the first monastic academies in medieval Armenia.

²⁸⁰ Peters, Behrens-Abouseif, et al., “Waqf.”

²⁸¹ La Porta, “Kingdom and Sultanate,” 96–97.

²⁸² Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:751.25–26, tr. Greenwood, 225.

²⁸³ Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, p. 122.

CHAPTER 3

THE MAKING OF A MONASTIC ACADEMY: INTELLECTUAL AND ASCETIC-MYSTICAL EDUCATION AT NAREK MONASTERY

Դու գաւրացիր եւ լեր լոյս եւ լուսաւորիչ:

Arm yourself, become a light and an enlightener.

— Anania of Narek, “To Priests”

When Anania was appointed abbot of Narekavank¹, it became his responsibility to order the monastery’s daily life, liturgical cycle, educational program, and other intellectual and spiritual activities. In this chapter, I will attempt a reconstruction of the system of intellectual and ascetic-mystical education that he initiated at Narek, which was one of the first — if not the first — of the major monastic academies in the Armenian oikoumené and became a model for subsequent ones.

Unlike their Greek and Latin counterparts, Armenian abbots were not in the habit of writing monastic rules or typika. There is nothing equivalent in the Armenian milieu to the foundation documents known from the Byzantine Greek monastic tradition.¹ Nor is there the Armenian equivalent to the various Orders that define Latin monasticism, each with their own particular rule, well-defined organizational structure, and differently articulated mission and lifestyle.² The nearest one comes to such a document in Armenian is the Book of Questioners (Գիրք հարցողաց / Girk' harc'olac'), an anthology of questions and answers on the monastic life, compiled from the ascetic writings of Basil of Caesarea and translated into Armenian in the late fifth/early sixth century.³ Step'anos Tarōnec'i refers to the role of this book in guiding and ordering the communal life at Sewan monastery and the other major cenoebia founded in this period (that were discussed in chapter two), including Narek.⁴ But the Book of Questioners, as its name implies was not a rule, typikon, or foundation document, and therefore it is unclear just what exactly its role was in the internal regulation of medieval monasteries. Certainly, it would have formed part of many a monastic library, been read and referred to by abbots, and probably even became part of the monastic school curriculum to help train monks in ascetic practices as well as educate them on the monastic lifestyle and worldview.

¹ On these, see Thomas and Hero, Byzantine Monastic Foundation Documents. The sole known exception is the eleventh-century typikon of Gregory Pakourianos for the Monastery of the Mother of God (Petritzonitissa) in Bačkovo, which was made in three languages: Armenian, Georgian, and Greek. Issuing from a Chalcedonian context, it is the kind of exception that proves the rule. On this typikon, see Thomas and Hero, Byzantine Monastic Foundation Documents 2:507–563.

But the specific details of a monastery's system of education, liturgical cycle, daily life, and other activities would have been based in part on the purpose for which a monastery was founded, in part on the leadership of its abbot, and in part on the individual traditions that each monastery formed over time. As to the first, all monasteries were spiritual centers of prayer, but they served a number of different purposes as well, and as such each had different emphases. Some, like Arcrunid Mahrast and Bagratid Hořomos mentioned in the previous chapter, being located near trade routes, served as places of lodging for travelers, wayfarers, and merchants.

² On Latin monasticism, see Beach and Cochelin, Cambridge History of Medieval Monasticism. The first example of western-style monastic orders in the Armenian context came in the fourteenth century with the Franciscan and Dominican Fratres Unitores (Unitor Brothers). See discussion and bibliography in La Porta, "Armeno-Latin Intellectual Exchange." A prominent example from the early modern period is the Armenian-Catholic Mkhit'arist congregation in Venice (with a second congregation established later at Trieste, then relocated to Vienna), which adopted the Benedictine Rule. See Awgorean, A Brief Account of the Mechitaristic Society, 35; Matt'ēos Ewdokiats'i, Hamarōtut' iwn varuts', 350.

³ Basil of Caesarea, Book of Questioners.

⁴ Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.3, 7, 8; MH 15:741–42.5, 750.22, 755.7, tr. Greenwood, 213, 225, 232.

Others, endowed with particularly prominent relics of saints, precious objects, or fragments of the True Cross, became places of pilgrimage, and thus generated income. Some, like Tat'ew, served as episcopal residences in addition to being places of spirituality and learning. Others served as the burial place of naxarar family members, like the monastery of the Holy Cross at Soradir for the Arcruni family.⁵ Of the many hundreds of monasteries that dotted the medieval and early modern landscapes of the Armenian oikoumené, a small number became academies and centers of learning, with libraries and scriptoria for the copying and illuminating of manuscripts. They are some of the same ones whose names became most prominent, in part because of the way in which they produced and housed men of learning and came to be the principal transmitters of Armenian literary and artistic culture into the early modern period. Examples include Hałbat' and Sanahin, Tat'ew, and a few dozen others. Narekavank' was one of the earliest if not the very earliest such monastic academy to be established. As such, Anania's impact as the first abbot and main founder of the monastery's intellectual and spiritual program of education shaped not just the future generations at Narek — including Anania's famous pupils Grigor and Uxtanēs — but also served as a model for the other major monastic academies that were founded after it. Therefore, a reconstruction of the system of education and spiritual life established by Anania at Narekavank' will also provide a picture of one of the earliest — if not the earliest — of the major medieval monastic academies that were the chief educational and cultural institutions of Armenian culture from the tenth to (at least) the sixteenth centuries.

⁵ See Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens no. 513, p. 93; Thierry, Monuments arméniens du Vaspurakan, 465–70.

Scripture and Liturgy

Of course, the beginning and end of a monk's education was the Scriptures. The use of the Psalms, as well as Proverbs, in the earliest elementary exercises to learn reading and writing in monastic settings is attested since at least the fifth century. In one of his epistles, Jerome (347 – 419) recommends the use of the Psalms and Proverbs of Solomon in elementary writing exercises.⁶ The same was true in Armenian monastic school settings and the particular connection between the book of Proverbs and literacy can be seen in it being the first book chosen to be translated into Armenian and immediately employed in spreading literacy in the new alphabet.⁷ From the manuscript tradition, we know that of the Old Testament portions of the Bible, it was the wisdom books that were most frequently copied by medieval scribes, and along with the Gospels, were one of the earliest forms of part-Bibles attested in the Armenian manuscript tradition.⁸ A monk would have encountered the corpus of Solomonic wisdom books from his earliest years of monastic education, inasmuch as they formed one of the core elements of the religious curriculum.⁹

In addition to literary instruction and exposure through reading and study, the monks also performed the Scripturally drenched liturgical services on a daily basis. The services of the daily hours with their core elements had already coalesced by the eighth century.¹⁰ A monk at Narek would have engaged on a daily basis in communal celebration of the night (գիշերային), morning (առավաւտեան), and sunrise (արեւադալ) hours; the little offices of the third (երրորդ), sixth

⁶ See Epistle 107.12; Larsen, “Excavating the Excavations,” 104.

⁷ See Koriwn, Life of Maštoc VIII, MH 1:238.7–8; Cowe, “Renewal of the Debate,” 249.

⁸ Cowe, “Typology of Armenian Biblical Manuscripts,” 65.

⁹ Cowe, “Renewal of the Debate,” 249.

¹⁰ See Findikyan, Commentary on the Armenian Daily Office.

(վեցերորդ), and ninth (իննեւորորդ) hours; and the evening (երեկոյեան) and peace (խաղաղական) offices.¹¹ The Psalms formed the core element of the daily office, or liturgy of the hours (ժամերգութիւն, literally “Songs of the Hours” or “Singing the Hours.”).¹² The entire Psalter was sung through in order in eight days during the night office (գիշերային ժամ), and numerous individual psalms were chanted in the course of the other hours.¹³ It was thus usual practice for the entire Psalter to be memorized.¹⁴ A monk was therefore immersed not just in the reading but in the chanting and performance of Scripture as well as texts such as prayers, litanies (քարոզք), and hymns (չարականք) based upon them.

In addition to the Psalms and wisdom literature, one could single out the Gospels as the most important portions of Scripture for the monks of Narek. Most of these texts would have been known by heart. The chanting of the Gospel formed the climax of the Sunday synaxis, as well as several other liturgical services a monk engaged in on a weekly basis. The Gospel would also be meditated on and memorized in solitude through various strategies of intensive reading and reflection (lectio divina). Imitatio Christi, based on the life of Jesus presented in the Gospels, was one of the central concerns motivating the self-disciplinary practices established in monastic settings, and a pious monk was ever mindful of his individual journey towards conformity into the likeness of Christ. This approach is well exemplified in Anania’s “Evangelical, Apostolic, and Prophetic Speech and Instructions,” which recapitulates and represents in more systematic form some of the teaching on individual virtues and practices found in some of his shorter

¹¹ The service known today as rest or compline (Հանդստեան) was unknown until the thirteenth century and did not become fixed until the fifteenth century, at the earliest. See Findikyan, Commentary on the Armenian Daily Office, 499–502.

¹² Jeffery, “Psalmody and Prayer.”

¹³ Winkler, “Armenian Night Office II,” 474–75.

¹⁴ On the centrality of the Psalms to monastic life and prayer in general, see McKinnon, “The Book of Psalms;” Dyer, “The Psalms in Monastic Prayer.”

instructions.¹⁵ In this work, Anania promotes a program of moral teaching that is shaped by the ethical teaching of Christ both in structure and content, bearing particular influence from the “sermon on the mount” of Matthew 5–7 and the “sermon on the plain” of Luke 6, in combination with the special emphasis upon love found in the Gospel of John. This form of lengthy ethical teaching framed as discourse has deeper roots as well, stretching back to the speeches of Moses in Deuteronomy, particularly chapters 28–30. One of the chief purposes of this work, as well as the other instructions, was to systematize the ethical teachings of Christ, as well as those found in other portions of Scripture, into a programmatic guide that would shape the way of life of monks living together at Narek.

In addition to the rest of the canonical biblical corpus, monks also read from a panoply of intertestamental, pseudepigraphal, and apocryphal literature, such as the Protoevangelium of James and the Armenian Infancy Gospel, as well as extra-canonical acts of various apostles, which were not always sharply distinguished from canonical Scripture.¹⁶ The monks of Narek received particularly good training in Scriptural exegesis under the guidance of Petros, who as mentioned previously was one of the most skilled Scriptural exegetes and commentators of the period.¹⁷

Narek was well known in Anania’s day for its vibrant liturgy, and in the tenth and early eleventh century, it became a center for liturgical performance of the highest quality as well as a site for the composition of new liturgical works. Anania’s pupil Uxtanēs mentions that his teacher Anania far surpassed others in regard to the melodic modulation of his voice when

¹⁵ MH 10:396–420.

¹⁶ On apocryphal and pseudepigraphal literature in Armenian, see Stone, “Armenian Apocryphal Literature;” Calzolari, “The Editing of Christian Apocrypha.”

¹⁷ Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7; MH 15:753.51, tr. Greenwood, 229.

chanting (հոգեւորական երգով գեղգեղամբ գեր ի վերոյ քան զամենեսեան).¹⁸ Anania was particularly gifted in music and directed a robust program at Narek for both liturgical performance and the composition of original works.¹⁹ Anania’s pupil Grigor composed a number of works in different genres — including encomia, litanies, and hymnic odes — for performance in liturgical services and feasts in order to enrich their celebration.²⁰ Thus, Step’anos Tarōnec’i, writing in the early eleventh century, singles out Narek among the cenobitic monasteries of the age in particular for its “magnificently endowed singers who were radiant in the performance of worship (բազմազարդ պաշտաւնապայծառ երգեցողովք).”²¹

Anania trained the monks of Narek not only in the highest quality performance of liturgical services, but equally in the spiritual understanding of the rites. To aid in the latter project, he would have had available the two recently composed liturgical commentaries of Grigor’s father, Xosrov Anjewac’i: the *Commentary on the Liturgy of the Hours*²² and the Commentary on the Divine Liturgy.²³ The mystical approach to liturgical theology is manifest across Grigor of Narek’s corpus, attesting to the approach taken by Anania in his direction of the liturgical education of the Narekian monks.

¹⁸ Uxtanēs, History of Armenia I.1, MH 15:451.38.

¹⁹ On the musical and liturgical side of Anania and Narek monastery, see T’ahmizyan, “Anania Narekac’u ev Nareka vank’i.”

²⁰ On the liturgical compositions of Grigor Narekac’i, see Terian, Festal Works; Arevshatyan, “La proclamation mélodisée (K’aroz);” idem, “Ganj.”

²¹ Step’anos Tarōnec’i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:751.27.

²² MH 10:35–227. On the use of this work in the curriculum at Narek, see T’amrazyan, Narekian dprots’ē, 43–51.

²³ Text and translation by Cowe, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy.

‘External’ Writings: The Trivium

The subjects of the trivium — grammar, rhetoric, and logic — formed the intellectual core curriculum of the medieval monastic academies.²⁴ Since the textbooks for these subjects were composed by pre-Christian Greek authors, they were referred to as արտաքին գրեանք (‘external writings’) as opposed to Patristic texts, which were called նուրբ գրեանք (‘subtle writings’).²⁵ For teaching each of the subjects of the trivium, Anania would have had at his disposal works available in Armenian, translated or based on Greek originals, often along with commentaries.²⁶

For grammar, Anania had available the Armenian translation of the Ars grammatica of Dionysius Thrax (ca. 170 – ca. 90 BC),²⁷ along with a number of original Armenian commentaries on it. Already by Anania’s time, five commentaries on the Ars grammatica had been made by: a certain Movsēs (ca. 470 – ca. 530?),²⁸ an anonymous grammarian,²⁹ a certain

²⁴ See La Porta, “Monasticism and the Construction;” Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 51–53; Calzolari, “Sciences sacrées et sciences profanes.” As for what in the Roman empire was known as the quadrivium — arithmetic, music, geometry, astronomy — such subjects, when studied at all, were generally done so at an elementary level in Armenian monastic settings and did not form part of the core curriculum. On the subjects of the quadrivium and their pursuit in Armenian school settings, see Mahé, “Quadrivium et cursus d’études;” Greenwood, “Reassessment of the Life.” One may also consult the recently published papers in Orientalia Christiana Periodica 86 no 1 (2020), which published the resulting papers from a 2018 AIEA conference entitled “Sciences and Learning in Armenia between Anania Širakac‘i and Grigor Magistros.” I have not yet had an opportunity to view this volume.

²⁵ Shirinian, “‘Artak‘in ew ‘nurb’ greank’;” The term ‘external’ was used in reference to a religious identity boundary and parallels Greek οἱ ἔξωθεν, ‘those of outside,’ or ἡ ἔξωθεν, ‘the [παίδευσις] of outside,’ the former already used by Paul in 1 Timothy 3:7: δεῖ δὲ καὶ μαρτυρίαν καλὴν ἔχειν ἀπὸ τῶν ἔξωθεν, ἵνα μὴ εἰς ὀνειδισμὸν ἐμπέσῃ καὶ παγίδα τοῦ διαβόλου. Այլ պարտ է նմա վկայութիւն բարի եւ յարտաքնոցն ունել. զի մի ի նախասինս անկանիցի եւ յորոգայթս Սատանայի: See Calzolari, “Transmission and Reception,” 48.

²⁶ Many of these translations owe their existence to the extensive translational activity of the so-called “Hellenizing School” (Յուլևարան դպրոց). On the “Hellenizing School,” its translations and translation technique, see Manandean, Yunaban dprots ‘ē; Akinean and Tēr-Pōghosean, “Matenagrakan hetazōtut‘iwnner;” Terian, “The Hellenizing School;” Muradyan, Grecisms.

²⁷ See Adontz, Denys de Thrace.

²⁸ MH 5:1195–1208.

²⁹ MH 5:1219–38.

Dawit',³⁰ Step'anos Siwnec'i (ca. 680 – 735),³¹ and Hamam Arewelc'i (ca. 825 – ca. 890).³² A deep knowledge of the grammatical tradition is evident in the works of both Anania and Grigor.³³

As for rhetoric, two main instructional works were available in Armenian. The first was the Progymnasmata of Aelius Theon (active 1st c.), the earliest text of its kind extant in Greek.³⁴ The second was a modified version of the Progymnasmata of Aphthonius, the most popular rhetorical handbook in East Roman educational settings.³⁵ A Christianized translation/adaptation of this text was known in Armenian as the Book of Chreia (Գիրք պիստոյից).³⁶ It is likely from the latter text that the monks of Narek learned the art of rhetoric. Anania's own mastery of the art of rhetoric is noted by his pupil Uxtanēs, who calls him a “renowned rhetorician (հռչակաւոր հռետոր),” and thus the monks of Narek were in particularly good hands when it came to learning rhetoric.³⁷ Anania emerges as a sought-after writer in a number of different genres thanks to his rhetorical mastery, being commissioned to write disputatious,³⁸ instructional,³⁹ and panegyric⁴⁰ works.

There were numerous texts available in the realm of logic, or dialectics, including Aristotle's Categories and De Interpretatione and Porphyry's Isagogē. Along with these were ³⁰ MH 5:1167–87.

³¹ MH 6:571–93.

³² MH 9:534–54. For an overview of these commentaries, see Adontz, Denys de Thrace; Ervine, “Yohannēs Erznkac'i Pluz's Compilation.”

³³ On Anania's familiarity with the grammatical tradition in Armenian, as evidenced even in the small fragment preserved from the Refutation of the T'ondrakians, see T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats'i, 58–72.

³⁴ See Russell and Moore “progymnasmata” and “Theon (3) (RE 5), Aelius.” The Armenian translation of this work preserves a more complete text than the mangled extant Greek form.

³⁵ See Russell and Moore, “progymnasmata” and Webb, “Aphthonius.”

³⁶ On this work, see Cowe, “Review of Book of Chries,” Muradyan, “The Rhetorical Exercises.”

³⁷ Uxtanēs, History of Armenia I.1, MH 15:455.71.

³⁸ Refutation of the T'ondrakians; Root of Faith.

³⁹ Book of Instruction; For an Explanation of Numbers.

⁴⁰ Encomium on the Holy Universal Church.

four important works by the Neoplatonist philosopher Dawit‘ Anyaġt (David the Invincible, fl. late 6th c.), three of which were commentaries on the works of Aristotle and Porphyry: 1. Definitions and Divisions of Philosophy; 2. Commentary on Porphyry’s Isagogē; 3. Interpretation of Aristotle’s Categories;⁴¹ 4. Interpretation of Aristotle’s Prior Analytics.⁴² As will be made apparent in the next two chapters, the tenth century was marked by significant ecclesiastical controversies, both external and internal to the Armenian Church, and the deployment of logic and argumentation in the service of defending Theology and doctrine is a marked feature of Anania’s and also some of Grigor’s works. Anania makes use of the philosophical works of David the Invincible in *For an Explanation of Numbers*⁴³ as well as the Root of Faith.⁴⁴ This latter work, particularly its first half,⁴⁵ reveals Anania’s mastery of dialectical argumentation, particularly as pertains to theological disputation.

Many other Greek philosophical texts were available in Armenian translation in Anania’s time, including the pseudo-Aristotelian De mundo and De virtutibus, and On Nature attributed to Zeno,⁴⁶ and it is clear that Anania read deeply from this literature and transmitted that learning to his students.⁴⁷ The works of Anania, like those of several of his contemporaries and near contemporaries, such as Xosrov Anjewac‘i (ca. 900 – ca. 963)⁴⁸ — his relative through the

⁴¹ The authorship of this work is disputed. Some scholars favor the view that it was composed by David’s contemporary Elias, who also hailed from the school of Olympiodorus in Alexandria. See Wildberg, “David;” idem, “Elias.”

⁴² See Calzolari, “Sciences sacrées et sciences profanes,” 380–83; eadem, “Transmission and Reception.” On David the Invincible, see Sanjian, David Anhaght; Calzolari et Barnes, L’œuvre de David l’Invincible; Contin, David l’Arménien.

⁴³ See T‘amrazyan, Anania Narekats‘i, 93–109.

⁴⁴ See T‘amrazyan, Anania Narekats‘i, 162–177.

⁴⁵ MH 10:480–539.

⁴⁶ [Pseudo-]Zeno, Anonymous Philosophical Treatise.

⁴⁷ Calzolari, “Sciences sacrées et sciences profanes,” 382; Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 52, n. 199.

⁴⁸ On Xosrov’s knowledge of Greek, see Cowe, “Introduction” in Xosrov Anjewac‘i, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy, 6–9, 71.

latter's marriage — and Grigor Magistros,⁴⁹ also reveal a knowledge of the Greek language, at least substantial familiarity, if not fluency.⁵⁰ There are works of Greek that Anania, Xosrov, and Grigor drew from, of which there was no Armenian translation known to have been made in their time. For example, Anania seems to have been familiar with Plato's Republic, which was not translated into Armenian until modern times.⁵¹ With the opening of the thughūr, and the shifting of the borders between Byzantium and the Islamicate world, the reintroduction of overland trade and increased traffic through Armenian territory between the two states, and the population movements that mark the era, it is likely that along with the exchange of goods and resources, texts were also exchanged. Some were likely brought from Byzantium to enrich the library at the newly founded monastery of Narek, perhaps thanks to Armenian monks coming from the Byzantine side of the border that we hear of in some of the sources (discussed in chapter two) and whose memory remains in the name of Hořomos monastery, or through the intermediary of Syriac monasteries in the area, many of which also housed Greek manuscripts. The period was a fertile one for cultural interchange between Syriac, Byzantine, and Armenian communities in the region.⁵²

'Subtle' Writings: Patristics

The works of Anania and Grigor are filled with references to the full panoply of Patristic works available in Armenian in the tenth century. Thus, the monks of Narek must have had

⁴⁹ Grigor Magistros' profound knowledge of Greek is evidenced in his letters, on which see van Lint, "Among Others." He also may have translated Plato into Armenian, on which see Tinti, "On the Chronology and Attribution."

⁵⁰ Cowe, "Renewal of the Debate," 250.

⁵¹ Cowe, "Renewal of the Debate," 250–51.

⁵² See Palmer, "Charting Undercurrents," 54.

access to a nearly complete library of the works of Greek and Syriac patristic authors in Armenian translation as well as native Armenian patristic texts.

An important early model for combining pagan philosophy with biblical exegesis and theological reflection was Philo (ca. 20 BC – 50 AD), whose works belonged to the category of ‘subtle’ writings.⁵³ Anania’s knowledge of Philo is attested to in For an Explanation of Numbers, which contains multiple references to the Alexandrian Jewish philosopher and exegete’s works and reveals the latter’s overall impact on Anania’s thought.⁵⁴ For an Explanation of Numbers also contains references to Plato and Pythagorean thought.⁵⁵

Anania’s instructions (խրատք) contain direct citations of John Chrysostom (ca. 350 – 407),⁵⁶ Basil of Caesarea (ca. 330 – 378),⁵⁷ Ephrem of Nisibis (the Syrian, ca. 306 – 373),⁵⁸ Evagrius of Pontus (ca. 345 – 399),⁵⁹ Gregory of Nazianzus (the Theologian, ca. 329 – ca. 390),⁶⁰ and Nilus of Ancyra (the Ascetic, fl. ca. 390 – 430).⁶¹ A few of them contain a phrase, located near the end of the treatise, indicating that there exists “immeasurable testimony (անչափ վկայութիւն)” from the church fathers relating to the topic being treated, which implies that ⁵³ Terian, “Hellenizing School,” 42.

⁵⁴ Anania of Narek, For an Explanation of Numbers, MH 10:441.14, 443.27, 443.31, 444.48. For further on Philo’s impact on the content of this work and Anania’s thought as a whole, see T’amrazyan, Anania Narekats’i, 84–93, 173–76.

⁵⁵ Anania of Narek, For an Explanation of Numbers, MH 10:442.20, 442.23.

⁵⁶ Anania of Narek, “To Priests,” MH 10:332.55; idem, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:395.242.

⁵⁷ Anania of Narek, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:362.16, 394.240.

⁵⁸ Anania of Narek, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:394.241.

⁵⁹ Anania of Narek, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:394.243.

⁶⁰ Anania of Narek, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:394.239. Gregory of Nazianzus is also referenced in For an Explanation of Numbers, MH 10:442.21–22. Additionally, I believe the reference to the “father of Theologians” (Հայրն Աստուածաբանից) in the same work (at MH 10:442.54) is also to Gregory of Nazianzus. A similar passage to the citation referenced there may be found in the latter’s Oration 38 (section 9), “On the Theophany of Christ” (In Theophonia, ի ծնունդն Քրիստոսի). This was a popular text in Armenian, transmitted in the Homiliary (Ճարճնար), and is quoted multiple times by Anania in the Root of Faith (see, for example, MH 10:488.87, 497.229). For the Armenian text of Oration 38, see Homiliary, P 120, ff. 3v–8r and for the portion of text in question, see 5r–5v.

⁶¹ Anania of Narek, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:395.244.

Anania was well versed in the patristic authorities concerning the topic he was addressing.⁶²

Surely, the reading of, and instruction based upon, patristic writers was employed in the educational program at Narek in order to teach ascetic practices and ethics.

The Root of Faith, as expected, contains numerous quotations from church fathers that Anania drew from in order to defend the theology and liturgical practices of the Armenian church vis-à-vis the imperial church. Much of this material is drawn from earlier florilegia, such as the Seal of Faith. In the Root of Faith, Anania refers to, or quotes directly from the works of Philo,⁶³ Ignatius of Antioch (ca. 35 – ca. 107),⁶⁴ Irenaeus (ca. 130 – ca. 202),⁶⁵ Origen (184/5 – 253/5),⁶⁶ Gregory Thaumaturgus (the Wonderworker, ca. 213 – ca. 270),⁶⁷ Julius I (Patriarch [Pope] of Rome, d. 352),⁶⁸ Athanasius of Alexandria (ca. 295/9 – 373),⁶⁹ Ephrem of Nisibis,⁷⁰ Macarius of Jerusalem (sed. 314 – 335/6),⁷¹ Cyril of Jerusalem (ca. 315 – 387),⁷² Apollinarius of ⁶² An illustrative example may be provided from the “On Humility:” Եւ ի վարդապետաց անչափ կայ վկայութիւն վասն խոնարհութեան: “And from the vardapets there is immeasurable testimony concerning humility.” MH 10:345.64. A similar phrase occurs at the end of the “On Patience and Peace” (MH 10:341.55) and the “On Compunction and Tears” (MH 10:394.238).

⁶³ MH 10:481.11, 519.546, 552.1011. I include Philo among the church fathers, because he is essentially treated as one by Anania and the Armenian tradition in general.

⁶⁴ MH 10:574.1273–77, 575.1292, 590.1476–78.

⁶⁵ MH 10:547.942–44, 571.1244.

⁶⁶ MH 10:589.1467.

⁶⁷ MH 10:539–40.810–16, 540.821–25.

⁶⁸ MH 10:548–50.959–79.

⁶⁹ MH 10:482.23, 483.25, 507.373, 542–43.862–78, 545–46.915–17, 546–47.930–33, 548.955–58, 571.1244, 572.1249–52, 572–73.1260, 573.1267, 581.1369–72, 590.1472.

⁷⁰ MH 10:507.372, 507.380, 528.659, 530.686, 532.718, 534.738, 535.750, 541–42.844–61, 546.920–25, 561.1121, 572.1244, 581–82.1378–80.

⁷¹ MH 10:563–64.1142–47. This quotation of Macarius of Jerusalem is significant since it is the very portion of the Letter until now known only from a quotation of Anania Širakac’i (and not in the abbreviated version that became canonized in the Book of Canons (Կանոնագիրք) and the Book of Letters (Գիրք թղթոց). It thus provides another witness to this significant portion of the Letter. On this Letter and its textual history, see Terian, Macarius of Jerusalem.

⁷² MH 10:532.719–720, 533.725–26, 547–48.945–49, 564–65.1148–65, 570.1225, 570.1229–30, 572.1244, 572.1247–48.

Laodicaea (ca. 310/13 – ca. 390),⁷³ Basil of Caesarea,⁷⁴ Gregory of Nazianzus,⁷⁵ Gregory of Nyssa (331/340 – ca. 395),⁷⁶ John Chrysostom,⁷⁷ Epiphanius of Salamis (ca. 310/20 – 403),⁷⁸ Nemesius of Emesa (fl. ca. 400),⁷⁹ Amphilochius of Iconium (d. after 394),⁸⁰ Severianus of Gabala (d. after 408),⁸¹ Cyril of Alexandria (ca. 376 – 444),⁸² Socrates of Constantinople (Scholasticus, ca. 380 – 439),⁸³ Juvenal (Patriarch of Jerusalem, sed. ca. 422 – 458),⁸⁴ Acacius (Bishop of Melitene in Lesser Armenia, sed. ca. 430 – ca. 439),⁸⁵ Proclus (Patriarch of Constantinople, sed. 434 – 447),⁸⁶ Dioscorus of Alexandria (sed. 444 – 451),⁸⁷ Timothy II Aelurus (the Cat, Patriarch of Alexandria, sed. 457 – 477),⁸⁸ Philoxenus of Mabbug (ca. 445 – 523),⁸⁹ and (Pseudo-)Dionysius the Areopagite (fl. ca. fifth to sixth centuries).⁹⁰

Preference in this work is naturally given to early Greek writers and texts, both because his presumed interlocutors are pro-Chalcedonians and because the early writers could be cited as witnesses to the initial period of unbroken communion of the universal Church. From all this,

⁷³ MH 10:540.822–25.

⁷⁴ MH 10:544.887–88, 547.934–36, 551.991, 552.1003, 566.1174–75.

⁷⁵ MH 10:481.10, 481.11, 483.26, 488.87, 490.124–31, 497.229, 503.315, 504.329, 505.350, 518.534–36, 518.539, 520.554, 526.632–33, 529.678–79, 530.686, 533.727, 536.753–57, 544.891–92, 551.990–91, 557.1057, 566–67.1174–91, 581.1373–75.

⁷⁶ MH 10:527.644, 541.830–43, 544.885–86.

⁷⁷ MH 10:492.149, 505.344, 518.533, 528.660, 534.734, 534–35.740–41, 535.743–44, 535.745–46, 544.893–95, 545.910–14, 553–54.1020–29, 572.1244, 572.1253–60, 573.1267, 573.1270–71, 581.1376–78, 589.1467.

⁷⁸ MH 10: 543–44.881–82, 544.889–90, 548.950–54.

⁷⁹ MH 10: 541.830–43.

⁸⁰ MH 10: 544–44.883–84.

⁸¹ MH 10:545.899–902.

⁸² MH 10:523.591, 528.658, 537.778, 540.826–29, 544–45.896–98, 574–75.1278–85, 575.1288, 577.1319, 585.1414, 590.1468.

⁸³ MH 10:537.772, 559.1090, 573–74.1268–77, 590.1474–75.

⁸⁴ MH 10:575.1293.

⁸⁵ MH 10:577.1321.

⁸⁶ MH 10:540.817–20, 545.903–05, 577.1319.

⁸⁷ MH 10:575.1288.

⁸⁸ MH 10:540.822–25.

⁸⁹ MH 10:547.937–41. I believe this is who is being referred to (Փիլիքսիմայ Բաբա եպիսկոպոս).

⁹⁰ MH 10:533.728–30, 546.918–19, 551.991, 562.1129, 571.1244, 572.1245–46, 578.1334.

Anania emerges as a deep reader of the Greek and Syriac fathers of the church, who was well versed in the theological and liturgical traditions of the Armenian church and its differences with the imperial church. He clearly had a command of the Greek patristic tradition, and passed that on to his students, which is apparent in the works of his pupils who became writers and whose works survive (Grigor and Uxtanēs).

Among Armenian texts and authors referenced in the Root of Faith are Grigor the Illuminator (Lusaworič', d. ca. 328), i.e. the History of Agat'angelos / The Teaching of Saint Gregory,⁹¹ Koriwn (ca. 390 – 447),⁹² Maštoc' (d. 441),⁹³ Movsēs K'ert'oī (ca. 470 – ca. 530),⁹⁴ David the Invincible,⁹⁵ Yovhan Mandakuni (catholicos, sed. 478 – 490),⁹⁶ Nersēs II (catholicos, sed. 548 – 557),⁹⁷ Neršapuh (Bishop of Mamikoneank' and Tarōn, 6th c.),⁹⁸ Movsēs II (catholicos, sed. 574 – 604),⁹⁹ Abraham I (catholicos, sed. 607 – 615),¹⁰⁰ Komitas I (catholicos, sed. 615 – 628),¹⁰¹ Petros (Bishop of Siwnik', ca. 500 – 557),¹⁰² John the Ascetic (Yovhannēs Mayravanec'i, fl. 7th c.),¹⁰³ Yovhan Ōjnec'i (catholicos, sed. 717 – 728),¹⁰⁴ Step'anos Siwnec'i ⁹¹ MH 10:531.704, 537.778, 543.879–80, 546.926–29, 582.1381, 583.1389, 583.1392–93, 588–89.1450–57, 593–94.1515–25. Anania also references Grigor the Illuminator in For an Explanation of Numbers (MH 10:440.7).

⁹² MH 10:577.1320.

⁹³ MH 10:560.1103, 577.1319–20.

⁹⁴ MH 10:582.1382.

⁹⁵ MH 10:582.1383, 585.1416, 585.1418, 586.1424, 588–89.1453.

⁹⁶ MH 10:569.1213

⁹⁷ MH 10:577.1321.

⁹⁸ MH 10:577.1321.

⁹⁹ MH 10:577.1321.

¹⁰⁰ MH 10:577.1321.

¹⁰¹ MH 10:589.1458.

¹⁰² MH 10:578.1327.

¹⁰³ MH 10:545.906–09. See Step'anos Siwnec'i, On the Incorrptibility of the Body of Christ, MH 6:455–56.1–3.

¹⁰⁴ MH 10:578.1329–32.

(ca. 680 – 735),¹⁰⁵ the Book of Letters,¹⁰⁶ and the Seal of Faith.¹⁰⁷ While Anania mostly referred to the works of Greek fathers, since they would be more credible in the eyes of his pro-Chalcedonian interlocutors, the references to Armenian fathers, councils, and collections of theological texts also reveal his profound knowledge of the Armenian theological tradition. There can be no doubt that Anania presided over a robust educational program in patristics at Narekavank’.

Ascetic Training, Spiritual Exercises, and Virtue Ethics

Intellectual work comprised only one facet of a monk’s training. Monastic education involved a holistic approach to the human person, aimed at shaping body, spirit, and soul, in addition to mind and intellect. Unfortunately, we are on less sure footing in regard to the specifics of spiritual and ascetic training in Armenian monasteries, because much of it took place in a one-on-one relationship between spiritual father and son.¹⁰⁸ Naturally, such direction was conducted on an oral basis and personally adapted to the needs of each individual monk.

In the case of Narek, we can recover some of the basic training that Anania may have provided young monks from his Book of Instruction (Խրատագիրք).¹⁰⁹ The core of the work was commissioned by bishop Xaç’ik, future Catholicos Xaç’ik I Aršaruni (sed. 972 – 992),¹¹⁰ and ¹⁰⁵ MH 10: 541–42.844–61, 542–43.862–78, 590.1468, 544.885–86, 544.889–90, 544.893–95, 544–45.896–98, 545.903–05, 545.906–09, 547.937–41. Most of the passages are quotations from those collected by Step’anos Siwnec’i in his On the Incorruptibility of the Body of Christ.

¹⁰⁶ MH 10:577.1321.

¹⁰⁷ MH 10:483.27, 540.821–25, 540–41.826–29, 541–42.844–61, 542–43.862–78, 545–46.915–17, 546.918–19, 546.920–25, 546.926–29, 546–47.930–33, 547.942–44, 547–48.945–49, 548.950–54, 548–53.959–1000.

¹⁰⁸ For a study of spiritual fatherhood in a near contemporary of Anania, see Turner, St. Symeon the New Theologian and Spiritual Fatherhood.

¹⁰⁹ MH 10:328–427. On the work in general, see T’amrazyan, Grigor Narekats’ in ev narekyan dprots’ ě, 1:163–212, 2:306–84.

¹¹⁰ T’amrazyan, Grigor Narekats’ in ev narekyan dprots’ ě, 1:184–88, 2:145.

one of its purposes was likely to provide guidance for shaping the worldview and regulating the behavior of the hundreds of new monks entering the many large coenobia founded in this period. The work thus focuses heavily on the initial stages of training: ascetic disciplines, ethical instruction in the virtues, and how to live harmoniously in community. Thus, “On Patience and Peace” focuses primarily on how to live peacefully with the brethren in one’s monastic community, how not to offend them, how to bear slights and return good when offended instead of retaliating. Another, “On Humility,” focuses on acquiring this virtue, which in the monastic setting is regularly placed at the beginning stage of virtue training. Thus, Anania writes, “Humility is the foundation of every virtue, and all the holy ones became pleasing to God through humility.”¹¹¹ Likewise, his contemporary in Byzantium, Symeon Eulabes — abbot of the Studite monastery and spiritual father of Symeon the New Theologian — in his only extant treatise, a manual on the ascetic life, gives one of his first instructions on the importance of doing everything with humility: “Perform every deed that is good with humility, recalling to mind the saying: ‘When you have done everything, say “we are useless servants, we have only done what we ought to do.””¹¹² Anania also refers to this same verse near the beginning of his “On Humility.”¹¹³ The acquisition and cultivation of humility was pivotal in the monastic setting, which required both obedience to one’s superior, the abbot, and service to the fellow monks in one’s community. Thus, Anania writes, “Humility is also obedience, to regard oneself at the rank of a servant and serve one’s companion, as the apostle says, ‘Be obedient to one another out of reverence for God [Eph. 5:21].”¹¹⁴ Another of his instructions, “On this Transitory World,” focuses on convincing the reader that all earthly glory, riches, grandeur, and pleasure quickly fades and passes away, and that one should thus seek heavenly goods.¹¹⁵ Such instruction would have been useful in providing a sense of vision and purpose to monks who lived from their youth in monasteries, having been separated from secular life and compelled to live under rules of obedience and chastity.

¹¹¹ Σημὴν ἀφένων τῶν ἀνωφελῶν ἐξ ἡμετέρων ἀποστόλων, ἐκ ἀφένων ὑποφωτισμένων ἡμετέρων ἐκ τῆς ἑσπερίας Ἐκκλησιαστικῆς: “On Humility,” MH 10:345.47.

¹¹² Τὸ ποιεῖν πᾶν πρᾶγμα ὅπερ ἐστὶ καλὸν μετὰ ταπεινώσεως, ἐννοοῦμενον τὸν εἰπόντα· «Ὅταν πάντα ποιήσητε, λέγετε ὅτι ἀχρεῖοι δοῦλοι ἐσμέν, ὃ ὀφείλομεν ποιῆσαι πεποιθήκαμεν.» Symeon the Studite, Discours ascétique 7.

¹¹³ MH 10:342.8.

In one of his lengthier instructions, “On Compunction and Tears,” Anania describes the cultivation virtue to be akin to the process of learning a secular craft, trade, or art (արուեստ). In order to acquire a virtue, one must be engaged in a particular exercise in a regulated and disciplined fashion with all the time and devotion one gives to learning any trade or skill. He writes, “the gift of compunction is a craft and one must obtain it by all means and with effort.”¹¹⁶ And just like any trade, it is learned best not through theoretical teaching on the subject matter, but by practicing the craft itself. Anania puts it this way:

When someone learns a trade from someone and after a while sets out to work in that trade, it is then that one better understands the particulars from the trade itself, rather than what was learned from the master. So then employ yourself in the trade of implorations, and the trade itself will teach you, as also the grace of our Master.¹¹⁷

As any musician well knows, the only way to make progress in learning an instrument is through regulated and disciplined practice. Likewise, in the cultivation of virtue. And so Anania gives the sage advice of developing a disciplined plan of action:

¹¹⁴ Խոնարհութիւն է եւ հնազանդութիւն, որ զինքն ի ծառայի կարգի ունի եւ սպասաւորէ ընկերին, որպէս ասէ առաքեալ «Հնազանդ լերուք միմեանց երկիւղիւն Աստուծոյ»: “On Humility,” MH 10:342.6.

¹¹⁵ See Cowe, “Renewal of the Debate.”

¹¹⁶ Այլ արդ, զղջման շնորհ արուեստ է, եւ բազում հնարիւք եւ ջանիւ պարտ է ստանալ զնա: MH 10.368.54.

¹¹⁷ Զոր աւերինակ ուսանի ոք արուեստ յուժեքէ եւ զարուեստն ժամանակ ինչ ի գործ արկանէ, յայնժամ յարուեստէն առաւել իմանայ գհանգամանն, քան զոր ի վարդապետէն ուսաւ: Այսպէս եւ դու զարտասուաւք պաղատանս քեզ գործ արա, եւ նա ինքն ուսուցանէ զքեզ, եւ ի շնորհէն վարդապետիս: MH 10:361.14–15.

Set for yourself an order and rule and intentionally designate a time for tears and request of God success in the gift and compel your nature, then God will look with favor and give the gift that you long for.¹¹⁸

Anania, attuned to the differences in individual human beings — how different approaches, experiences, and input affect people in different ways — recognized that there is no one-size-fits-all method to cultivating the art of tears. And thus, he says:

Test your nature, to see from what kind of reason compunction comes, and frequently have recourse to that. And also, observe from what kind of reason it diminishes, and cast that away from yourself, so that God looks upon you with favor and gives the gift.¹¹⁹

If one wants to excel in the art of tears, and the cultivation of virtue in general, one must know how to say no to lesser goods, just as the pianist must marry themselves to their instrument and say no to so many other things in order to devote time to practice and rehearsal. And so, Anania counsels, “Separate yourself from earthly diversions so that you occupy yourself with compunction and tears, and the gift will take root in you.”¹²⁰

Such an approach to virtue ethics had its origins in the philosophical schools of antiquity. Here it is instructive to recall Pierre Hadot’s emphasis upon the centrality of spiritual exercises (exercices spirituels) to ancient philosophical education in general in the ancient world, which was then adopted by and further developed in monastic settings.¹²¹ Hadot brought into focus the way in which ancient philosophy was not concerned exclusively with abstract intellectual pursuits — as is the case, by and large, within the academic discipline of philosophy today —

¹¹⁸ Եւ կարգ դիր եւ սահման եւ խորհրդեամբ արա զարտասուեացն ժամանակն, եւ յԱստուծոյ խնդրեա զյաջողութիւն շնորհին, եւ բռնադատեա զբնութիւնդ, յայնժամ Աստուած ի փոյթն հայի եւ տայ շնորհս, որոյ ցանկաս: MH 10:363.22.

¹¹⁹ Եւ փորձեա զբնութիւնդ, թէ յորպիսի պատճառէ զայ զղջումն, եւ յայն յաճախեա, եւ դարձեալ՝ միտ դիր, թէ յորպիսի պատճառէ շիջանի, եւ զայն ի բաց ընկեա, որ Աստուած ի փոյթն տեսանէ եւ շնորհն տայ: MH 10:364.31.

¹²⁰ Յերկրաւոր զբաւսանաց որոշեա գրեզ, որ զղջման եւ արտասուեաց պարապեա, եւ շնորհն արմատանայ առ քեզ: MH 10:365.36.

¹²¹ See Hadot, Exercices spirituels et philosophie antique (English translation by Michael Chase: Philosophy as a Way of Life); idem, Qu’est-ce que la philosophie antique? (English translation by Michael Chase: What is Ancient Philosophy?); Sharpe, “Pierre Hadot (1922–2010).”

but was first and foremost a bios, a way of life (manière de vivre). This observation holds true even more with regard to monasticism, which adopted many of the models and practices of the late antique philosophical schools.

One of the pivotal figures in this regard was Evagrius of Pontus, who was trained both in Christian Neoplatonist philosophy with the Cappadocian fathers and ascetic spirituality with the desert monks of Egypt. His works present a synthesis of these two spheres. Nearly all his writings are addressed to fellow monastics to explain and aid them in the ascetic path, including the psychological and psychosomatic phenomena that confront the one travelling it, and to assist them in the quest for spiritual knowledge (gnosis) and union with the divine (theōsis). Evagrius' ascetic-mystical system is well known from his trilogy Praktikos (cpg2430), Gnostikos (cpg2431), and the Kephalaia Gnostika (cpg2432).¹²² The overarching goal was intensive training of body, mind, soul, and spirit, which would result in the transformation of the human person into one who is unmoved by bodily passions and thus endowed with the mental clarity to access spiritual knowledge and insight (gnosis) and achieve ever closer union with the divine (theōsis).¹²³ This training of course takes place in stages and in a determined order. Thus, Praktikos focuses upon the preliminary stages of ascetic discipline, training the body and desires through practices of denial and engagement, in combat with bad thoughts and demons. Gnostikos lays more emphasis on the deep, inner self, aiming to guide the mind into deeper spiritual insight. The cryptic sayings in the Kephalaia Gnostika is meant only for the well advanced, to be used in conjunction with contemplation in quest of the higher stages of spiritual gnosis or enlightenment.

¹²² See bibliography for editions of these works. I also have included in parentheses the number of each work of Evagrius according to that of the Clavis Patrum Graecorum, since sometimes his works are known under different titles. Further bibliography may be found in Kalvesmaki, Guide to Evagrius Ponticus.

¹²³ For further on Evagrius' understanding of ascetic-mysticism, see Konstantinovsky, Evagrius Ponticus; Guillaumont, Un philosophe au désert.

Anania's Book of Instruction bears much influence from Evagrius, bringing the same goals to the cenobitic setting. To help them achieve this lofty aim, Anania provided the monks under his charge with intensive training in ascetic or spiritual exercises, which taught them both how to regulate their thoughts and emotions and how to redirect and transform their desires and appetites. This made them capable of accessing the higher stages of gnosis and brought them further along the path of theōsis.

Like Evagrius, Anania's ascetic-mystical program also targeted the inner and outer self with strategic practices intended to facilitate the self's transformation. In the early stages (the equivalent of Evagrius' Praktikos), to which the extant instructions of Anania are mostly devoted, he, like the desert philosopher before him, focused not just on ascetic disciplines targeting outward behavior, but on the reformation of the inner, unseen self. He taught that just as one must direct one's outward conduct with disciplined fasting, prayer, labors, poverty, and the like, so one must cultivate the inward virtues of gentleness, humility, compassion, patience, peacefulness, and the like. He writes:

And just as you direct your outward conduct (զերեւելի վարսդ), i.e. [with] fasting, prayer, labors, and poverty, so also direct your inward disposition (զաներեւոյթ բարս), i.e. [be] gentle, humble, pleasant, merciful, without rancor, patient, peace-making, forbearing, because one must in every way be pleasing to God, be cleansed of outward faults as well as inward, spiritual vices, since the Pharisee and the foolish virgins rectified only their outward conduct and were found unworthy [see Luke 18:9–14 and Matthew 25:1–13].¹²⁴

¹²⁴ Եւ որպէս զերեւելի վարսդ ուղես՝ զպահս եւ զաղաւթս, զաշխատութիւնս եւ զանընչութիւնս, այսպէս եւ զաներեւոյթ բարս ուղղես՝ հեզ, խոնարհ, քաղցր, ողորմած, անոխակալ, համբերող, խաղաղարար, երկայնամիտ, քանզի պարտ է ամենայնիւ հաճոյ լինել Աստուծոյ, յերեւելի սխալանաց մաքրիլ եւ յաներեւոյթ՝ ի շնչական ախտից, քանզի վարիսեցին եւ յիմար կուսանքն զերեւելիս միայն ուղղեցին զվարսն եւ խոտան գտան: Anania of Narek, "To Priests," MH 10:330.30.

Since outward conduct is observable by others and thus easier to manage in the setting of regulated monastic living, Anania placed the focus of his teaching on the inward disposition and its reformation, teaching how practically to uproot the negative emotions of anger, hatred, greed, and lust, and cultivate in their place love, compassion, gentleness, and humility.¹²⁵

Such ascetic or spiritual exercises were pursued communally and individually. In addition to participation in the public, communal liturgical services mentioned above, at Narek even greater emphasis was laid upon a monk's solitary prayer before God and individual practice, which also was seen, in liturgical terminology, as a sacrifice (պատարագ).¹²⁶ Speaking about private prayer, Anania writes, "your prayer is a sacrifice to God; offer it before God with purity of heart."¹²⁷ A monk thus was trained to engage in mental and spiritual exercises, such as meditation upon and memorization of Scripture, imageless and wordless contemplation,¹²⁸ as well as more physically demanding exercises aimed at subduing bodily passions and appetites and monitoring the senses, such as fasting, the sublimation of sexual energy and desire, solitude, and vigil. A couple kilometers from Narek monastery are caves built into a nearby hill where ascetics would take lengthy solitary retreats to engage in such training. We know that Gregory, and other monks of Narek monastery, went there frequently and according to some traditions, he wrote the bulk of his Book of Lamentation there.¹²⁹

¹²⁵ He mentions this specifically in his "Evangelical, Apostolic, and Prophetic Speech and Instructions." See MH 10:403–04.101–11.

¹²⁶ Cowe, "Generic and Methodological Developments," 680.

¹²⁷ քո աղաւթքն պատարագ է Աստուծոյ, սրբութեամբ սրտիւ մատո զնա առաջի Աստուծոյ: Anania of Narek, "On Compunction and Tears," MH 10:369.61.

¹²⁸ This was a characteristic feature of Evagrian spirituality and the traditions influenced by him. See Stewart, "Imageless Prayer;" Tobon, "Words Spoken in Silence;"

¹²⁹ On these caves, see Hakobyan, "Surb Grigor Narekats' u chgnaranē."

As any clinical psychologist will affirm, the regulation of one’s thoughts is critical to self-transformation. Evagrius is well known for his focus upon thoughts and their regulation and was the first to develop a robust theory of the way thoughts operate and how to combat bad ones. Anania likewise devoted a treatise to thoughts that reveals the impact of the desert master.¹³⁰ In the following passage, Anania argues that all evil, like good, is first conceived before it is acted upon:

As a servant waits on the command of his master, in the same way are all the senses governed by thoughts, because first one conceives a good deed, and then performs it. As also the prophet says, “I thought and kept your ways.”¹³¹ Also, first one thinks about sin and then commits it. As the prophet again says, “They conceived pains and begot iniquity.”¹³² And first one loves someone in their thoughts and then gives them gifts, as when first the spirit of Jonathan was bound with David and then he took off his garments and clothed him with them.¹³³ And first one hates someone in their thoughts and then murders them, as when first Joseph’s brothers hated him and then sold him into Egypt.¹³⁴ Now, it is evident that all the senses are activated through thoughts. For this reason, exert yourself with all your strength and purify your thoughts from all invisible, sensual passions and be especially on guard against lustful thoughts, about which the Lord also says, “He committed adultery in his heart.”¹³⁵

Both good and evil operate from the inside out, being conceived first in the thoughts before being carried out. Anania recognized that the chief struggle lies within the mind, and like Evagrius and many other writers from the ascetic tradition, he made use of what became the ¹³⁰ “On Attention to Thoughts,” MH 10:356–359.

¹³¹ Psalm 17:22; Isaiah 46:11.

¹³² Psalm 7:15(14).

¹³³ See 1 Kingdoms (1 Samuel) 18:1–4.

¹³⁴ See Genesis 37 at v. 4.

¹³⁵ Matthew 5:28. Չոր աւրինակ ծառայ սպասէ հրամանի Տեառն իւրոյ, այսպէս ամենայն սգայարանքն ի ձեռն խորհրդոցն կառավարին, քանզի զբարին նախ խորհի եւ ապայ առնէ: Որպէս եւ մարգարէն ասէ. «Խորհեցայ եւ պահեցի զճանապարհս քո»: Եւ մեղքս յառաջ խորհի եւ ապայ առնէ: Որպէս ասէ դարձեալ մարգարէն. «Յղացաւ զցաւս եւ ծնաւ զանաւրէնութիւն»: Եւ նախ սիրէ խորհրդովք եւ ապայ տայ պարգեւս, որպէս զայն, որ յառաջ կապեցաւ ոգին Յովնաթանու ընդ Դաւթի եւ ապայ հանեալ զհանդերձս իւր զգեցուցանէր նմա: Եւ նախ ատէ խորհրդովք եւ ապայ սպանանէ, որպէս զայն, որ յառաջ ատեցին եղբարքն Յովսէփու զՅովսէփի եւ ապայ վաճառեցին յԵգիպտոս: Արդ, յայտ է, թէ ամենայն սգայարանքն [sic] ի ձեռն խորհրդոցն ներգործին: Վասն այսորիկ դու յամենայն զաւրութենէ ջան դիր եւ զխորհուրդսդ սրբեա յամենայն աներեւոյթ շնչական ախտից, եւ առաւել զգուշացիր ի պոռնկական խորհրդոց: Վասն որոյ եւ Տէրն ասէ. «Շնացաւ ի սրտի իւրում»: Anania of Narek, “On Attention to Thoughts.” MH 10:356.4–12.

typical monastic language of battle and combat to describe the interior struggle of the self against the invisible powers that introduce bad thoughts. An example is the following passage from the same treatise:

And when the [bad] thought comes, be alarmed and combat it, confess and repent, so that you do not welcome it in, grow accustomed to it, and then be conquered by it. About this the apostle says, “We dismantle thoughts and every elevation of thoughts and we take every thought captive into obedience to Christ.”¹³⁶ Now, as a thief has darkness as his weapon and comes in the night to steal, then when they bring light he is alarmed by the light and driven off, so also Satan is a thief. When he sees your mind darkened, he debilitates you; at that time, shine the light of Christ into your mind and Satan will be driven off and your mind will be illumined... And as they build a wall around a city prior to the coming of the enemy, so you also, fortify in advance your mind with fasting, prayer, and tears, then God will see your diligence and illumine your mind. And do not consider transgression by thoughts to be insignificant, for pride and envy and hatred come about by means of thoughts and they are heinous sins. Just as while enemies are outside of the stronghold, it is possible to easily guard against them, yet if they fight and take the stronghold and enter it, then it is difficult to drive them out from there; so also for you in regard to the war with thoughts. While [a thought] is outside the stronghold of your mind, be on guard against it. For if it [i.e. the thought] makes battle and takes your stronghold and enters inside, then it will bring much trouble upon you.¹³⁷

Anania’s approach to thoughts and the battle against invisible powers that lay siege against the one engaged in ascetic struggle is typically Evagrian and broadly in line with what had become the monastic norm.¹³⁸ Anania would have introduced his spiritual children at Narek to this from the first time they began to deal with negative emotions.

¹³⁶ 2 Corinthians 10:4–5.

¹³⁷ Եւ յորժամ գայ խորհուրդն, դու զարհուրեա՛, մարտի՛ր, խոստովանեա՛ եւ ապաշխարեա՛, որ ոչ ընդելանաս, եւ սովորիս եւ յաղթիս: Վասն այսորիկ ասէ առաքեալ. «Ձխորհուրդս քակեմք եւ զամենայն բարձրութիւն խորհրդոց եւ գերեմք զամենայն միտս ի հնազանդութիւն Քրիստոսի»: Արդ, զոր աւրինակ գողն գիտաւորն իւր գէն ունի եւ գայ ի գիշերի գողանալ, յայնժամ, երբ լոյս բերեն, նա զարհուրի ի լուսոյն եւ հալածի: Այսպէս եւ սատանայ գող է, յորժամ տեսանէ խաւարեցուցեալ զմիտս քո եւ լքուցանէ, յայնժամ դու գլոյսն Քրիստոսի ի միտս քո ծագեա եւ սատանայ հալածի, եւ միտքդ լուսաւորին... Եւ որպէս պարիսպ ածեն յառաջագոյն նախ քան զգալ թշնամեացն, այսպէս դու յառաջագոյն պարսպեա զմիտս քո պահաւք եւ աղաւթիւք եւ արատուաւք, նայ Աստուած ի քո փոյթն տեսանէ եւ լուսաւորէ զմիտս քո: Եւ մի փոքր համարիր զյանցանս խորհրդոցն, քանզի հպարտութիւն եւ նախանձ եւ ատելութիւն խորհրդովք լինին եւ մեղք մեծամեծք են: Զոր աւրինակ մինչդեռ թշնամին արտաքոյ իցէ ամրոցին, դիւրաւ մարթի զգուշանալ ի նմանէ: Իսկ եթէ մարտուցեալ առնու զամրոցն եւ մտանէ ի ներքս, յայնժամ դժուարին է հանել զնայ անտի: Այսպէս եւ դու. զպատերազմ խորհրդոցն, մինչդեռ արտաքոյ իցէ ամրոցի մտացդ քո, զգուշացիր ի նմանէ: Իսկ եթէ մարտուցեալ առնու զամրոցդ եւ մտանէ ի ներքս, յայնժամ առաւել աշխատութիւն հասուցանէ քեզ: Anania of Narek, “On Attention to Thoughts.” MH 10:358–59.30–33, 37–42.

So, in addition to intellectual formation, which we associate most closely with education today, spiritual and bodily training was also of central performance to monastic education. This holistic approach to the formation of the human person had as its principal goal the shaping of the whole self into the likeness of Christ, propelling the individual on the path to deification (theōsis, աստուածացում), the ultimate goal of a monk.¹³⁹

Writing and the Use of Texts to Aid the Ascetic-Mystical Quest

Writing and texts were also brought into the service of this chief monastic goal. Anania was likely the primary writing teacher at Narek, overseeing those engaged in literary composition. Two of his pupils went on to become major authors of the era: Grigor and Uxtanēs. As mentioned already, Uxtanēs called Anania a “renowned rhetorician.” He also referred to him as a “skilled poet (բանիրուն պուեստիկոս),” “spiritual author (հոգեւոր հեղինակ),” and as the “harp of the spirit (քնար հոգևոյն).”¹⁴⁰ Throughout this study, it has become clear how Anania excelled across a number of different genres: theological disputation and argumentation, ascetical instructions, and panegyric.

Rather than being pursued for the purpose of entertainment or creative expression and aesthetic beauty alone — although it was that too — texts composed for internal use in monastic settings were written and employed to aid the ascetic-mystical quest of monastics.¹⁴¹ As ¹³⁸ See for example, Evagrius of Pontus, On the Thoughts (cpg2450) or the Antirrhetikos (cpg2434).

¹³⁹ Russell, Doctrine of Deification.

¹⁴⁰ Uxtanēs, History of Armenia I.1, MH 15:453.58, 455.71.

¹⁴¹ I have written about this monastic approach to texts in Arlen, “Texts for Keeping Watch.”

mentioned above, Anania’s instructions reveal his prominent use of wisdom literature, including modeling his own writings on that tradition. Like Evagrius — who wrote scholia and commentaries on biblical wisdom literature, including one each on Proverbs (cpg2458.4) and Ecclesiastes (cpg2458.5)¹⁴² — and other writers from the monastic tradition, Anania’s texts reveal significant impact from the Solomonic corpus and the book of Psalms both in terms of content and genre. The impact of the book of Ecclesiastes upon Anania’s “On this Transitory World” and Solomonic literature in general on his corpus has been noted in a recent study.¹⁴³ Inspired by the biblical book of Proverbs, Anania also had a predilection for composing proverbs of his own taken from the operation of the natural world in order to draw lessons for, and illustrate teaching about, human reality and ethical behavior. This occurs in many of the instructions. An illustrative example may be taken from “On Patience and Peace:”

As fire when it finds tinder flares up and burns down places, then when that matter is exhausted it is quickly extinguished, so it is with the hurt feelings of your brother. If you provide tinder by continually harping on the matter, then the problem will be kindled all the more and hatred will be engendered.¹⁴⁴

Another example from the same work is the following:

As rain descends drop by drop from above collects and raises a flood, so it is with hurt. When you launch words at your brother, then they mix together with other words and anger grows.¹⁴⁵

¹⁴² For editions see the bibliography. He also wrote one on the Psalms (cpg2455). A critical edition of the latter is being prepared by Marie-Josèphe Rondeau. See also Dysinger, Psalmody and Prayer.

¹⁴³ See Cowe, “Renewal of the Debate,” 249–50, which also includes a translation of “On this Transitory World.” An examination of the scriptural references and allusions in his Book of Instruction reveals biblical wisdom literature’s profound impact on that work.

¹⁴⁴ Չոր աւրինակ հուրն, յորժամ նիւթ գտանէ, բորբոքեալ՝ զվայրսն հրդեհէ, իսկ ի պակասել նիւթոյն արագապէս շիջանի, այսպէս եւ գտրտմութիւն յեղբարէն, եթէ նիւթ տաս յոլոկութիւն բանից, նա առաւել բորբոքի չարն եւ ատելութիւն ծնանի: MH 10:340.43.

¹⁴⁵ Չոր աւրինակ անձրեան ի վերուստ առ սակաւ սակաւ իջեալ՝ բազմանայ եւ հեղեղ յարուցանէ, այսպէս եւ գտրտմութեան բանս, յորժամ առաքես յեղբայրն, յայնժամ եւ այլ բանք ի միասին խառնին, եւ բարկութիւն ածէ: MH 10:340.46.

Texts like these reveal the prominent influence of the tradition of wisdom literature upon Anania's own writing, revealing how he creatively adapted the genre to the tenth-century setting of large-scale cenobitic monasticism.

The adaptation of wisdom literature to an ascetic setting is also characteristic of Evagrius' corpus. The desert father is credited with the invention of the 'chapters' (capita, kephalaia) genre, which drew in part from biblical wisdom literature, particularly Proverbs, and became one of the primary genres in subsequent Byzantine monastic literature.¹⁴⁶ To my knowledge, Anania is the first writer in Armenian to have composed kephalaia according to the Evagrian model, in a text known under the title "Recapitulated and Condensed Sentences on the Things Said to You Before [Գլխաւորեալ եւ համառաւտ բանք վասն յառաջ ասացելոցդ]." ¹⁴⁷ As the title indicates, it is composed of sentences (kephalaia, capita) that in a very condensed form contain the bulk of Anania's teaching as it is known from the Book of Instruction. Unfortunately, the text is not well preserved in the manuscript tradition and breaks off after 128 capita, and so it is not possible to determine how lengthy the original was, or whether there were different cycles of capita, as for example is the case with Evagrius' Kephalaia Gnostika. The pithy nature of the kephalaia facilitated their memorization and thus functioned as an aide-mémoire for the main contours of Anania's ascetic teaching, which was also one of the reasons Evagrius developed the genre of kephalaia.¹⁴⁸

One of the most striking literary methods employed at Narek was the composition of powerful, rhythmic and alliterative poetic texts meant to be used in conjunction with spiritual exercises in order to aid the monk's self-transformation. Such works also took the Psalms and wisdom literature of the Bible as their models, adapting them to the aims of monks in the contemplative, monastic setting. Like the kephalaia of Evagrius, they were meant to be memorized and meditated upon in order to promote ascetic virtue and to be used in conjunction with the practice of an ascetic discipline such as fasting or keeping watch (vigil).¹⁴⁹ Anania referred to these compositions as “prompts” (պատճառք), and included them in his various ascetic instructions, to be used as aids in acquiring virtue or in overcoming obstacles to mystical union. For example, in “On Compunction and Tears,” Anania says that the “prompts” he gives are to be employed in order to help spark tears when the heart is hardened and tears are not immediately forthcoming: “So then, whenever you wish to shed tears and your heart is hardened, give yourself prompts before God in this way.”¹⁵⁰ An example of such a prompt is the following passage:

¹⁴⁶ See Géhin, "'Les collections de kephalaia monastiques,'" Kalvesmaki, "Evagrius in the Byzantine Genre of Chapters;" Konstantinovsky, Evagrius Ponticus, 23.

¹⁴⁷ MH 10:421–427.

¹⁴⁸ See Stewart, "Evagrius Ponticus on Monastic Pedagogy," 358.

Also make this a prompt (պատճառ) and model (աւրինակ) for compunction: Who praises a king for having possessions and heaps of treasures? For that is customary for kings. But we marvel when a king inclines to the poor and has mercy on [i.e., gives alms to] the orphan and widow. So also You, oh Creator, it is no marvel that You created the heavens and earth out of nothing, because such is the ability of your creative power. But we marvel that You descended from heaven, took the form of a servant,¹⁵¹ granted paradise to the thief with a single word,¹⁵² forgave the prostitute at your holy feet,¹⁵³ made the prodigal son worthy of a kiss.¹⁵⁴ Now, have mercy also upon me, oh Creator, not according to my worth, but according to Your great mercy.¹⁵⁵

¹⁴⁹ For further on memory, texts, and their relationship to asceticism in Evagrius, see Krawiec, “Literacy and Memory.” On the use of the Grigor’s Book of Lamentation in the context of a monk’s private vigil, see Arlen, “Texts for Keeping Watch.”

¹⁵⁰ Արդ, յորժամ կամիս արտասուել, եւ սիրտդ քարացեալ լինի, դու այսպէս պատճառս տուր Աստուծոյ: Anania of Narek, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:376.126.

¹⁵¹ See Philippians 2:7–8.

¹⁵² See Luke 23:43.

¹⁵³ See Luke 7:36–50.

¹⁵⁴ See Luke 15:11–32 at 20.

¹⁵⁵ Դարձեալ՝ զայս արա պատճառ եւ աւրինակ զղջման. Զթագաւոր ո՞վ ոք գովէ, եթէ՛ ինչս ունի եւ մթերս գանձուց, զի այն սովորութիւն է թագաւորաց, այլ ընդ այն զարմանամք, որ յաղքատսն խոնարհի եւ որբոյն [CORR. սրբոյն] եւ այրոյն ողորմի: Այսպէս եւ դու, Արարիչ, Ո՛չ է զարմանք, եթէ զերկինս եւ զերկիր յոչընչէ արարեր, զի այն քո արարչական զաւրութեանդ է կարողութիւն, այլ ընդ այն զարմանամք, որ յերկնից

Another example, drawn from the same work, is the following passage:

Just as a king's portrait, painted with colors upon a canvass, when the king sees it grown old and tarnished to the point of ignominy, he orders it to be restored according to the original likeness; likewise I, oh Creator, created in Your image, have made it [i.e., the divine image in me] old through sin. Now, restore it [in me], oh Doer of good, according to Your great mercy.¹⁵⁶

Another striking example of a prompt, this time from “On this Transitory World,” which was meant to help the monk overcome the fleeting temptations of this world, goes as follows:

Now, meditate on all this and keep it firmly in mind so you can overcome the world:
Humans also can quickly be changed, for although they rise up as the heavens, they are reduced to dust like the earth.
They spread out as a cloud, and dissipate like a raindrop.
They bloom radiant as a flower, and wither away like grass.
They flare up as a flame, and fade away like smoke.
They whirl about as a storm, and fall apart like a spiderweb.
They erupt like a furnace, and are extinguished as flickering embers.
They surge like the sea, and sink to the depths like sand.
They stand stately as a tree, and fall away like a leaf.¹⁵⁷

Խոնարհեցար, զկերպարանս ծառայի առեր, աւագակին միով բանիւ դրախտն շնորհեցեր, զպոռնիկն ի քո սուրբ գարշապարդ թողեր, զանառակ որդին համբուրի արժանի արարեր: Արդ, այժմ եւ ինձ ողորմեա, Արարիչ, ոչ ըստ արժանեաց իմոց, այլ ըստ մեծի ողորմութեան քում: Anania of Narek, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:363– 64.27–29.

¹⁵⁶ *Դարձեալ՝ զոր աւրինակ ի տախտակի նկարեալ դեղովք պատկեր թագաւորի, եւ տեսեալ զպատկերս իւր հնացեալ եւ աղտեղեալ յանարգութիւն՝ վերստին նորոգել հրամայէ թագաւորն ըստ առաջին նմանութեանն:
Այսպէս եւ ես, Արարիչ, ստեղծեալ ի քո պատկերդ հնացուցի մեղաւք: Արդ, նորոգեա, Բարերար, ըստ մեծի ողորմութեանդ քում: Anania of Narek, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:377–78.130–32.*

Further examples may be found in that work or in “On this Transitory World,” a translation of which may be found in Cowe, “Renewal of the Debate.”

¹⁵⁷ Նա եւ մարդն կարի արագապէս փոփոխի / Ձի թէպէտ որպէս զերկինս բարձրանայ, / Որպէս զերկիր մոխրանայ, / Որպէս զամպ սփռի / Եւ որպէս կաթիլ պակասէ, / Որպէս ծաղիկ պայծառանայ / Եւ որպէս խոտ չորանայ, / Որպէս բոց բորբոքի / Եւ որպէս ծուխ լուծանի, / Որպէս մրրիկ փոթորկի Եւ որպէս սարդիոստայն անկանի, / Որպէս հնոց սաստկանայ / Եւ որպէս առկայծեալ շիջանի, / Որպէս ծով յառնէ / Եւ որպէս զաւազ ի խորս ընկղմի / Որպէս ծառ վայելչանայ / Եւ որպէս տերեւ թաւթափի: Anania of

As T‘amrazyan has observed, such texts by Anania are the precursor to those that Gregory developed and perfected in the Discourses (քաղիք) that make up his Book of Lamentation.¹⁵⁸ And we know that this book was specifically requested by ascetics to be used in conjunction with their solitary spiritual exercises.¹⁵⁹ One may compare, for example, the above passage of Anania’s with the following portion from the second discourse of Gregory’s Book of

Lamentation:

Why have you hardened the heart of my miserable self to not fear You, oh Ineffable and Awful One?
Let me not be fruitless in my small labor, like a negligent sower of barren land.
May I not: labor, but not give birth, lament, but not shed tears, meditate, but not sigh,
cloud, but not rain,
run, but not arrive,
raise my voice, but not be heard by you, supplicate, but remain ignored,
groan, but not be pitied, beg, but not be helped at all,
sacrifice myself, but not be consumed (on the altar), see you, but walk away empty.
Hear me, before I call out to you, who alone are mighty.¹⁶⁰

This was likely the particular focus of Anania’s writing instruction to the monks at Narek. This form was initiated by Anania and brought to fruition by his pupil Grigor: to creatively use Narek, “On this Transitory World,” MH 10:353.42–43. I have included here only the beginning for purposes of space. The full ‘prompt’ is over two pages long in the large MH edition.

¹⁵⁸ T‘amrazyan, Anania Narekats’i, 253–275.

¹⁵⁹ The opening of the book mentions that it was written “at the request of the father monks and the many hermits (ի խնդրոյ Հայցման Հարց միանձանց եւ բազմաց անապատականաց).” Grigor of Narek, Book of Lamentation, MH 12:49–50.

¹⁶⁰ Ընդէ՞ր կարծրացուցանես զսիրտ եղկելոյս / Չերկնչել ի քէն, անճառ եւ ահաւոր: / Մի՛ եղէց անպտուղ ի փոքր վաստակոյս՝ / Իբր ապաջան սերմանող անբերրի երկրի: / Մի՛ լիցի ինձ երկնել, եւ ոչ ծնանել, / Ողբալ, եւ ոչ արտասուել, / Խորհել, եւ ոչ հառաչել, / Ամպել, եւ ոչ անձրեւել, / Ընթանալ, եւ ոչ հասանել, / Ինձ ձայնել, եւ քեզ ոչ լսել, / Պաղատիլ, եւ անտես մնալ, / Կողկողիլ, եւ ոչ ողորմիլ, / Աղաչել, եւ ոչ ինչ աւագտել, / Չոհել, եւ ոչ ճենճերել, / Չքեզ տեսանել, եւ դատարկ ելանել: / Լո՛ւր ինձ նախ քան զկարողալս իմ առ քեզ, միայնդ հզաւր: Grigor of Narek, Book of Lamentation 3.C, MH 12:59.79–94.

Scripture and examples from the natural and human world to compose texts to be used in conjunction with ascetic practices and the development of virtue.

This reconstruction of the educational system that Anania introduced at the monastic academy of Narek has made it clear that education was not principally or primarily an abstract, intellectual pursuit. Rather, it was an initiation into a bios or manière de vivre, to use Hadot's terms. In addition to reading and study of the Scriptures, Patristics, and the subjects of the trivium, a monk was also trained in ascetic or spiritual exercises and the cultivation of virtue in order to acquire a second nature and transform the self into the divine likeness. The use of texts, both the communal performance of liturgical services as well as the private use of texts such as Anania's "prompts" or Grigor's "discourses," in conjunction with ascetic exercises and contemplation aided this most lofty of aims. It is thanks to such a well-integrated and holistic system of education targeting the whole human self — intellect and mind, body, soul, and spirit — that Narek monastery, under the leadership of Anania, became such a famous center of learning and spirituality, whose approach influenced the later monastic centers in Cilicia, Greater Armenia, and throughout the broader Armenian oikoumené into the early modern period.

CHAPTER 4

UNIFORMITY AND PLURALITY IN AN AGE OF DYNAMIC CHANGE: ANANIA, THE T'ONDRAKITES, AND INTERNAL ECCLESIASTICAL AND SOCIETAL CRISES

Եւ այսմ հաւատոյ եմ որդի եւ ժառանգ ի ծծնդենէ մինչեւ ի ծերութիւն, եւ ի մահուանէ մինչեւ ի յարութիւն, յորում առուր եւ դատաստանն եւ հատուցումն արդար կշռովքն Աստուծոյ բոլոր մարդկութեանս:

I am a child and inheritor of this faith, from birth to old age, from death to resurrection, when both judgment and recompense [will be measured out] on God's just scales to all of us humans.

— Anania of Narek, “Letter of Confession”

This chapter centers on the complicated issue of Anania’s relationship with the T’ondrakians. The T’ondrakians or T’ondrakites (Arm. T’ondrakec ‘ik’, Թոնդրակեցիք) as the group was referred to — they called themselves Christians — was a community centered around a village in Apahunik’ known as T’ondrak (modern-day Töndürek in Turkey)¹ that existed outside the structure of the established Armenian Church.² According to extant sources about the community, the T’ondrakites rejected the official church’s sacramental forms, including baptism, eucharist, marriage, ordination rites, and episcopal hierarchy. They had their own way of performing these rites and their own organizational structure. During the period that relates to this study, the movement, or at least views associated with the community, spread to other parts of the Armenian oikoumené, specifically the southern and western portions, including Vaspurakan where Narek was located. In the tenth century, Anania, Grigor, and other monastic figures were either accused of or came under suspicion of being T'ondrakites.

¹ A rather desolate and volcanic region, the name of the village may be related to the ancient Near Eastern root for a furnace, tanur/tandur/tonir. Polemicists exploited this connection when they claimed that the heretics were rightly so called, since their inheritance would be the eternal flames of Gehenna. See Russell, “Last of the Paulicians,” 686.

² In this chapter I will interchangeably use terms such as “established Church,” “mainstream Church,” “institutional Church,” “official Church,” “Apostolic Church,” “Orthodox Church,” or simply “the Church” to refer to the official Armenian Church in distinction to other communities such as the T’ondrakites or Paulicians, who did not belong to it.

There are a number of questions that have perplexed scholars about the T'ondrakian movement and about which scholarly consensus has not been established. What was their origin and relation to previous non-orthodox, dissident, or syncretistic communities that were active in different areas of Armenia, especially the Paulicians, but also earlier groups, such as the Manichaeans, Messalians (and/or Mchē/Mchēūt' iwn), Borborites, and others?³ What was the core agenda and motivation of the movement? That is, was it primarily a religious, political, or socio-economic movement, or a combination of one or more of the above?⁴ What precisely were the theological and Christological beliefs of the group?⁵ What was the afterlife of the community, including its relation to later Christian and Muslim sectarian communities?⁶

Naturally, this chapter does not seek to review all the above issues, fascinating as they are. In my treatment, I would like to focus on exploring two aspects related to the T'ondrakite controversy and Anania's own entanglement within it. The first is the strong association in some of the sources between monastic/ascetic figures and the T'ondrakites, beginning with Anania himself. Anania was commissioned by Catholicos Anania Mokac'i to write a treatise against the movement, in which he defended the official Armenian Church's beliefs and practices (on which

³ This is addressed in Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy; Nersessian, Tondrakian Movement; and Dadoyan, Armenians in the Medieval Islamic World, vol. 1.

⁴ The standard approach in Soviet Armenia was to interpret it as a socio-economic movement expressed in religious terms. See the studies cited in Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, 24 n. 58. Garsoïan chose instead to focus on the doctrinal matters pertaining to the controversy. Vrej Nersessian attempted a synthesis between the two; see especially Tondrakian Movement, 73–83.

⁵ This is the central question pursued, for example, in Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy.

⁶ This question has been taken up in the following studies: Conybeare, Key of Truth; Moosa, Extremist Shiites, 432–447; Russell, “Last of the Paulicians;” Ohanjanyan, “The Key of Truth.”

see below), yet despite this, Anania — along with several other monastic and ascetic figures of the tenth and early eleventh century — was accused of being a Tʿondrakite. How could Anania be denounced as a Tʿondrakite despite having written a treatise against the movement? Likewise, how could a bishop, such as Yakobos of Harkʿ, be accused of belonging to an anti-hierarchical and anti-establishment movement?⁷ Such data seem at first glance counterintuitive, since, among other things, abbots and bishops were immersed in the established Church’s liturgical cycle and rituals and enmeshed within its structure, whereas the Tʿondrakians rejected the same and operated outside of it. How is one to understand this apparent contradiction?

The second issue, related to the first, pertains to the agenda and beliefs of the movement. However, rather than seeking to recover the Tʿondrakian agenda and beliefs, I would like to turn the question around and ask how it was perceived and interpreted as a threat by the established Church. How did the chief representatives of the establishment Church, such as Catholicos Anania Mokacʿi, understand the “Tʿondrakite” label and what did he mean by employing it against ascetic and monastic figures? In shifting this focus of the latter question away from the Tʿondrakites’ actual beliefs and towards their perception and representation by the Church establishment and the subsequent use of the term against figures threatening to the hierarchy, we actually move closer to addressing the question that the extant sources allow us to pose.

The central difficulty confronting scholars who have occupied themselves with the question of what the Tʿondrakians actually believed is that no texts issuing directly from the community contemporary to their main period of activity from the ninth to twelfth centuries are extant.⁸ Therefore, as is often the case with defunct heretical communities, in order to recover some idea of their beliefs one has only the sources of their opponents to work with. In the present case, these sources issue from clerical historians and other figures belonging to the established Church, who thus are writing from a polemical standpoint. Thus, one of course must use extreme caution, since such sources are generally full of invective, fabricated accusations of impure and wicked deeds engaged in by the heretical community in question, and hyperbolic or other distortions of their beliefs, including attributing beliefs or practices to the group that they did not actually believe or practice but which were known to be characteristic of other heretical groups.⁹

⁷ See Aristakēs Lastivertcʿi, History 22.

Armenian sources are no exception to this general rule. On the contrary, they exemplify it admirably.¹⁰ For this reason, we may never be able to say with confidence what exactly the beliefs and practices of the T'ondrakians were. However, through careful reading of the polemical texts written against them by their opponents, one may uncover how and why the T'ondrakians were perceived to be a threat by the establishment church and what the label came to signify when it was employed by such figures against their opponents. Following this line of inquiry, we may gain insight into the first issue and come to understand how it could be the case that ascetic and monastic figures were associated with the T'ondrakians (i.e., viewed by the establishment as representing the same or a similar threat to that posed by the T'ondrakites).

⁸ The Key of Truth (Բանալի ճշմարտութեան), once held to be a manual of the Paulicians whose original was written between the seventh to ninth centuries, is no longer considered to be so, despite espousing many of the same beliefs as those we hear reported about the pre-modern T'ondrakians. It seems to have been written in the late eighteenth century and to bear influence from modern European Protestant Theology (suggestions have included Anabaptist, Calvinist, Baptist, and Lutheran). One may read about its origins and the arguments against its medieval provenance in Nersessian, Tondrakian Movement, 89–96 and Ohanjanyan, “The Key of Truth.” For the text of the Key of Truth, see Conybeare, Key of Truth.

⁹ A prime example may be found in Russell, “Mother of All Heresies.”

¹⁰ For a survey of the principal Armenian sources, see Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, esp. pp. 80–111; Nersessian, Tondrakian Movement, esp. pp. 1–5, 55–72.

In order to understand these issues in their full contextual complexity, it is necessary to take a wide purview and to consider the threat of the T'ondrakians in light of other societal and ecclesiastical crises that marked the period from the ninth to the eleventh centuries. In so doing, we will be able to set the T'ondrakian threat to the Church hierarchy in relation to the other factors threatening the Church's position and authority during this period. These include both external (an encroaching, imperialist Byzantine Church, specifically from the second half of the tenth century onwards) as well as internal threats (the T'ondrakians and other revolt movements; the separatism of the metropolitan of Siwnik' and the catholicos of Caucasian Albania, power struggles between the catholicos with vardapets and abbots (such as Anania) and ascetically/spiritually-inclined bishops (such as Xosrov Anjewac'i and Yakobos, bishop of Hark'). But first let us introduce the most relevant sources to the T'ondrakite issues that will be pursued in this chapter before returning to these issues.

THE PRINCIPAL SOURCES

The following sources are the most important for pursuing the questions posed in this chapter.¹¹ Anania's Refutation of the T'ondrakians [Հակաճառութիւն ընդդէմ Թ'ոնդրակեցւոց] was the first and most important source relating to the theological aspects of the controversy between the T'ondrakites and the established church. It is very unfortunate that only a small fragment of the work survives to the present day. Extrapolating from the detailed ecclesiological discussion of various ways of understanding the “church (եկեղեցի),” which comprises the fragmentary excerpt of the work preserved by Yovhannēs Erznkac‘i, one may deduce that Anania’s original Refutation was a rather lengthy and exhaustive treatise that in turn discussed, explained, and defended various issues of ecclesiology, including the sacraments, liturgy, and ritual, and other church practices and doctrine that were rejected by the T‘ondrakites. From Grigor Magistros, we learn that Anania’s Refutation was commissioned by Catholicos Anania Mokac‘i.¹²

¹¹ For a survey of other sources that relate to the T'ondrakites and also the Paulicians, see Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, esp. pp. 80–111; Nersessian, Tondrakian Movement, esp. pp. 1–5, 55–72; Lemerle, “L'histoire des pauliciens;” Hamilton and Hamilton, Christian Dualist Heresies. A bibliography is maintained by Carl Dixon on his Academia.edu page: https://www.academia.edu/49599147/The_Paulicians_A_Bibliography

Anania’s Refutation was referred to by every subsequent writer who had occasion to deal with the doctrinal aspects of the T‘ondrakite controversy and was considered to be the definitive treatment of the matter. The first such writer to express this opinion is Grigor of Narek, who in his letter to Kčaw monastery (on which, see below) refers to Anania and his Refutation three times.¹³ Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, who devotes only a single line of his Universal History to Smbat Zarehawan and the T‘ondrakite movement, also notes the significance of Anania’s Refutation.¹⁴ Grigor Magistros (on whom, see below) likewise refers the Syrian catholicos to Anania’s Refutation so that the former may gain an accurate understanding of the doctrinal matters pertaining to the controversy.¹⁵ Finally, in the twelfth century, when referring to the critiques of the T'ondrakians against the established Church in one of his encyclical letters, Nersēs Šnorhali says that Anania had already given a complete response to all of them in his Refutation.¹⁶ Rather than rehash the treatment Anania had already given, most of the writers mentioned above simply refer their readers to Anania's treatise. For modern scholars interested in the movement, it is therefore all the more lamentable that nothing more than a short fragment of this significant work survives today. With so many testimonia from pre-modern authors, especially their ordering multiple copies to be made, one may find it surprising that no more than a fragment of Anania's treatise is extant. It is possible that Anania's Refutation was intentionally destroyed after the T'ondrakian movement begun to fade away or move underground in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, on the fear that others could be corrupted by coming across their views in Anania's Refutation. Just such a sentiment is expressed by Aristakēs Lastivertē'i when he writes:

¹² Therefore, its terminus ante quem is ca. 963–966 (the date of Anania Mokac‘i’s death). On the date of Anania Mokac‘i’s catholicosal tenure, see Greenwood, Universal History, 222 n. 91, 92 and 232 n. 155. See also T‘amrazyan, Grigor Narekats‘ in ev narekian dprots‘ē, 2:144.

¹³ Firstly, in the beginning of the letter, he censures the abbot for apparently ignoring Anania’s Refutation (եւ գերջանիկ տեառն մերոյ զԱնանիայի զգարմանագիրժ հակաճառութիւն նամակին զրաբանականս ասել կամ անպատեհս, կամ ոչ Աստուծով խաւսեցեալ: MH 12:1087.2). Secondly, after reviewing the erroneous beliefs of the T‘ondrakians, he says that his uncle and teacher (Anania) had already demolished their views (Արդ, գայտսիկ հաւրեղբայրն մեր եւ վարդապետ, մեծաւ քննութեամբ խնդիրս արարեալ իբրեւ զԱստուծոյ ջատագով եւ անդստին իբր զիմաստուն նախամարտիկ, տապալեաց զառասպելաբան հայհոյութիւն անաւրինելոցն թոնրակեանցն, թէ ոչ մեք զանուն պղծոցն ի համբաւուց ի սակաւ ինչ լրոյ գիտեալք: MH 12:1088.21). Finally, at the end of the letter, he admonishes the abbot to order copies of Anania’s Refutation to be made (եւ զհաւրն Անանիայի զլիազիրութեամբ զմատեանսն, որ ընդդէմ հերձուածողացն հոգս տարեալ գրեաց, եւ դուք գրել հրամայեցէք: MH 12:1089.37)

¹⁴ MH 15.753.52; Greenwood, Universal History, 229.

But we considered it improper to put their foul works into writing because they are so filthy, and, furthermore, because not everyone is unshaken by what they hear. The mention of many sins stimulates those who hear and even leads them to perform such deeds themselves. For this reason, I avoided [mentioning] them.¹⁷

It is equally possible that the treatise simply ceased to be copied in subsequent centuries, once the Church was no longer occupied with the T'ondrakite threat.

Despite authoring this treatise, as mentioned before, Anania himself was accused of being a T'ondrakian later in life, during the catholicosal reign of Xaç'ik I Aršaruni (sed. 972/3 –

¹⁵ Այլ դու, ո'վ քահանայապետ սուրբ եւ Յիսուսի հետեւեալ բոլորն այրական սերտութեան, աղէ ա'ռ ընթերցիր, եթէ գտցես յայդմ գաւառի, գարբոյն եւ գերիցս երանելի վարդապետին զգիրս Անանիայի, գոր ի խնդրոյ տեառն Անանիայի կաթողիկոսին Հայոց: Letters-II no. 4 (67) MH 16:196.32.

¹⁶ There are many printings of these letters. See, for example, Nersēs Šnorhali, Encyclical Letters, 269. Translation of the relevant passage may be found in Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 54, n. 209.

¹⁷ Բայց զնոսս մծղնէ զգործն անպատշաճ համարեցաք ընդ գրով արկանել. քանզի կարի աղտեղի է. եւ զի ոչ ամենայն ոք պնդակազմ է լսելեաւք. բազմաց մեղացն յիշատակ ի խտխտանս ձգէ զլսաւղան եւ ի կատարումն գործոյն իսկ ածէ, վասն այսորիկ եւ ես խոյս ետուլ յայնմանէ: Aristakēs Lastivertē'i, History 23, MH 16:622.46.

990/1).¹⁸ He was thus compelled to write a “Letter of Confession” (Գիր խոստովանութեան) to the catholicos, in which he professed his orthodox beliefs and sought to clear his name, in part by referencing his earlier work that denounced Tʻondrakian views and defended the Church.

The second most important source is Grigor of Narek’s “Letter to Kčaw Monastery (Թուղթ ի հոյակապ եւ յականաւոր ուխտն Կճաւայ)” preserved in the Book of Letters (Գիրք բղթոց). It was written to admonish that monastery and its abbot because of their alleged tolerance towards Tʻondrakites and their beliefs and apparent commerce with the Tʻondrakite community. The letter contains valuable summary information concerning Tʻondrakite beliefs and practices and has also been understood by scholars to be a summation or outline of the main points of Anania’s lost Refutation. It also gives valuable information on the early phase of the movement in the first half of the ninth century, relating to Smbat of Zarehawan’s execution by the Qaysite emir Abū’l-Ward.

Grigor’s Book of Lamentation (Մատենան ողբերգութեան) can also be read within the backdrop of the Tʻondrakite controversy. Certain discourses (բանբ) focus on aspects relevant to the controversy and as a whole the book emerges as a powerful defense of the institutional church — its creed, sacraments, and liturgy. For example, discourses 33 and 34 articulate the established church’s creedal confession of faith, discourse 53 is a profound meditation on the mystery of holy communion, discourse 75 is an encomiastic reflection on creedal ecclesiology, while two of the latter discourses reflect on important ritual items: 92 on the semantron and 93 on the holy chrism (miwron).

¹⁸ Tʻamrazyan, Grigor Narekatsʻ in ev narekyan dprotsʻ ջ, 2:131–32.

From the mid-eleventh century, two letters of Grigor Magistros — who was appointed Dux of Mesopotamia by Emperor Constantine IX Monomachus (r. 1042–1055) — also contain important information about the Tʿondrakites. Grigor Magistros actively persecuted and uprooted the Tʿondrakite community which was active in Byzantine Mesopotamia (which at the time also included the districts of Vaspurakan and Tarōn and thus comprised the core territory of the community).¹⁹ He knew of their beliefs and practices from first-hand accounts. He had seen (and then destroyed) some of their own writings during one of his campaigns against them and had learned about their beliefs and practices from two Tʿondrakite leaders that he had interrogated.²⁰ One of his letters is addressed to the Tʿondrakites themselves (Letters-II no. 5 [68]) while another (already referred to above) was sent to the Syriac catholicos (Letters-II no. 4 [67]), one of the major ecclesiastical hierarchs in the area. The Tʿondrakites had appealed to the Syriac catholicos to be accepted into his jurisdiction and taken under his protection. The catholicos had then written to Grigor Magistros as the leading Byzantine secular official in the region, and in this letter, which is Grigor Magistros’ reply to the catholicos, he attempts to persuade the latter not to accept the Tʿondrakites or provide them refuge because of the danger they pose as a heretical community.

The last important source for our purposes is the History of Aristakēs Lastivertcʿi, which was written in the 1070s and covers the period from the end of the tenth century until 1071. Written in order to provide an account for the Seljuk conquests and the loss of major cities, Aristakēs’ History explains these events by following the biblical literary model of depicting foreign invasion and subsequent exile and dispersion as a result of divine punishment for corporate and communal sin and societal corruption.²¹ Aristakēs was also deeply influenced by his older contemporary Yovhannēs of Kozerñ’s millenarian speculation and apocalypticism, which was employed as a lens through which to interpret the real meaning and cause behind the catastrophic events of the period.²² It is in this context and motivated by such views that Aristakēs devotes two chapters to discussing various examples of T’ondrakite activity and the way that the “heretical sect” spread throughout various southern and western districts of the Armenian oikoumené in the 22nd and 23rd chapters of his History. It is telling that these two chapters immediately precede his account of the Seljuk invasion of Ani and slaughter of the local population. By this literary positioning, the reader is led to deduce that the T’ondrakite heresy was a latent cause for the destruction visited upon the great Bagratid capital.

¹⁹ Garsoĭan, Paulician Heresy, 98.

²⁰ Garsoĭan, Paulician Heresy, 98.

DYNAMISM AND SOCIETAL UPHEAVAL

Political Instability and Charismatic Leaders of Popular Movements: Bābak and the Khurammī; Smbat and the T’ondrakites

The period from the ninth to eleventh centuries is one of dynamic change in the Armenian oikoumené. In the first chapter, we surveyed some of the principal changes and developments that occurred on the political plane. At the start of the ninth century, Armīniya was a large province consisting of Greater Armenia, Eastern Iberia (K’art’li), and Caucasian Albania (Ałank’), governed by a caliphal representative (ostikan) who had a seat in Duin and P’artaw. Efforts were being made to further integrate Armīniya into the ‘Abbāsīd Caliphate, such as the settling of Arab tribes in the caliphal North, some of which established emirates in the region. By the second half of the ninth century, however, the large administrative entity of Armīniya began to disintegrate into smaller units. The Arab tribes, which were meant to bind the province closer to the caliphate, developed semi-independent trajectories of their own, with some merging into the local naxarar structure of Armenian society through intermarriage and alliances. At the same time, the ostikanate became a dynastic position that increasingly began to operate out of its own interest (rather than that of the caliph's). With crisis at the caliphal center during the decade of anarchy and its aftermath, the caliph became less able to exert his control over the dynastic, and increasingly autonomous, provincial governors. To mitigate the growing independence of the ostikan, the Bagratuni nahapet's position was elevated to 'prince of princes' (իշխան իշխանաց) and then 'king' (Մարզապետ, malik). This 'divide and rule' strategy seemed to have an immediate impact, since by the end of the ninth and early tenth century, the Sajīd ostikan and Bagratuni king soon were warring with one another.

²¹ Cowe, “Two Tales of a City,” 98–102.

²² Cowe, “Two Tales of a City,” 100–01.

Before long, the centrifugal tendencies of other prominent naxarar dynasts of the period led to internal fragmentation of the Armenian polity. The elevation of the Bagratuni house's position and their royal honorifics sparked the ambitions of other major houses. At the beginning of the tenth century, a separate Arcruni kingdom was established in Vaspurakan, and then a kingdom in Siwnik' in the century's latter half. The Bagratuni realm itself also divided into lesser kingdoms. This fragmentation of the Armenian realm into small, autonomous polities as well as the centrifugal tendencies observable across the caliphate sparked in part by internal crisis at the caliphal court created favorable conditions for the expansion of the Byzantine Empire. The empire expanded eastwards into Armenia and southwards into Syria, Cilicia, and Mesopotamia under the Macedonian dynasty — some of whose leaders stressed their Armenian extraction — and the expertise of several capable Armeno-Byzantine generals. By the tenth century, the Byzantine empire had regained all of Lesser Armenia and defeated the emirates in the Borderlands. In the first half of the eleventh century, they successively annexed the kingdom of Vaspurakan, then the Bagratuni kingdoms of Ani and Kars. But in the latter half of the century, Turkic Seljuk armies rapidly conquered much of these same territories and began their permanent settlement in the region.

Naturally, all this dynamism and instability on the political plane and the consequent movements of peoples and borders had dramatic impacts on the local population and society. Disruption to the traditional naxarar ruling structure and the influx of new power players in the area in the form of the migrating Arab tribes ignited the aspirations of other non-traditional actors to seize power. In addition to the establishment of the emirates, there were populist and revolt movements, some of which gained wide followings and carved out significant, if short-lasting, territorial gains. One of the most notable of those affecting Armīniya was the Khurramī revolt of Bābak, which lasted from 816 until Bābak's death in 838. The revolt was centered in Azerbaijan (Ādharbayjān), part of the province of Armīniya, with allies and connections both in Mesopotamia and among Armenian rulers.²³ Certain lords of Siwnik' and Ałuank' allied themselves with Bābak, who was even given the daughter of Prince Vasak Siwni in marriage in 821.²⁴

The revolt of Bābak appears in hindsight as a movement that contained both ethnic, religious, and perhaps also social/populist motivations. On the one hand, it was composed primarily of local, Iranian/Persianate elements operating in opposition to Arab rule. As Patricia Crone notes, "Bābak certainly craved status as a local king on the model of the Armenian princes” and his revolt was directed against the new Arab colonists in the region.²⁵ Bābak also promoted messianic claims about his own person, claiming that the spirit of the deceased Jāvīdhān — the former leader of the Khurramī cult who was put to death by Smbat Bagratuni in 816 — had passed onto him and calling himself “the avenging guide” (al-hādī al-muntaqim).²⁶ According to Bar Hebraeus, who compiled his Chronography from earlier sources, the leader of the Khurramī sect claimed to be “the [long-]expected mahdī” and “called himself ‘Christ’ and the ‘Holy Ghost.’”²⁷ They seem to have been religiously syncretistic.²⁸ The revolt was eventually suppressed by al-Afshīn, who had been charged by Caliph al-Mu‘taṣim with the military operation against Bābak, and succeeded in capturing the rebel leader in 837 with the aid of the Siwni prince Sahl Smbat (known as Sahl Ibn Smbāṭ al-Armanī in Arabic sources) and sent him to the ‘Abbāsīd capital of Sāmarrā’, where he was executed in 838.²⁹

²³ Crone, "Bābak;" Sourdell, "Bābak;"

²⁴ Dadoyan, Armenians in the Medieval Islamic World, 1:94.

There are certain striking similarities between the Khurramī community under Bābak and the first phase of the T‘ondrakite community under Smbat of Zarehawan.³⁰ The T‘ondrakians were active on the opposite (western) end of the Armenian oikoumené, also in the first half of the ninth century. The origin of the community before their radicalization by Smbat in this period is obscure. They seem to have been a geographically remote, Christian community of conservative believers, that remained outside of the institutional Armenian church structure, and who had

²⁵ Crone, “Bābak.”

²⁶ Crone, “Bābak;” Dadoyan, Armenians in the Medieval Islamic World, 1:91.

²⁷ Խաչատուրյան, Մատենական Գրականություն... Բար Հեբրեոս, Chronicon Syriacum, 144; tr. Budge, 1:131.

²⁸ Dadoyan, Armenians in the Medieval Islamic World, 1:91–92.

²⁹ Crone, “Bābak;” Sourdel, “Bābak;” Dadoyan, Armenians in the Medieval Islamic World, 1:94.

³⁰ In the memory of the Armenian figures who speak about Smbat of Zarehawan, the latter’s activity is associated with the catholical reign of Yovhannēs V of Ovayk’ (833–855) and the tenure of sparapet Smbat the Confessor (826–855). See Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, 140–43.

syncretistic elements drawn from Irano-Armenian traditional folk belief and religion, Zoroastrianism, Christianity, and later perhaps also Islam.

In general, the Armenian Church was not as centralized an institution as its Byzantine counterpart. The beginning of the interweaving of Christianity and the church hierarchy into the naxarar social structure began with the conversion of the Aršakuni royal court in the early fourth century. Each naxarar domain soon had its own bishop, which generally came from one of the noble scions of the ruling family in that domain. The interlocking relationship between the naxarar politico-social structure and the church became further entrenched over the course of late antiquity and into the early middle ages. Thus, the interests of the ruling family of a region and the episcopal hierarchy became closely aligned and intermeshed and thus the episcopal hierarchs often exhibited the decentralizing and centrifugal tendencies that characterized Armenian society at large.³¹

Due to the mountainous terrain that made up the Armenian oikoumené, some smaller villages and communities remained relatively isolated from the developments and institutional structures of the main ruling party in a domain. The historian of the Arcruni family and Vaspurakan, T'ovma, who wrote at the end of the ninth and beginning of the tenth century offers a memorable description of a remote community in Sasun, a part of the Armenian oikoumené not so very distant from T'ondrak:

They dwell in deep gorges, in clefts in the mountains, in deep forests, and on mountaintops. They live separately by families, so distant from each other that if one of their strong men were to shout from a very high place he would hardly be able to make his voice carry anywhere; you would think it a mere echo from the rocks. Half of them lose their native tongue from living so far apart and never greeting each other, and their mutual speech is a patchwork of borrowed words. They are so profoundly ignorant of each other that they even need interpreters... But when enemies reach their land, the mountain peoples unite to aid their princes, for they are loyal... They are called light-armed and couriers, and dwell in the mountain that divides Aġnik' and Tarōn. Because of their obscure and inscrutable speech and way of life they are called Xut', from which name the mountain is also called Xoyt'. They know the psalms in the old translation of the Armenian teachers, which they have continually in their mouths. They are the peasants of Syria who followed [to Armenia] Adramelēk' and Sanasar, sons of Senek'erim king of Assyria and Nineveh, from whose name they call themselves Sanasnayk'. They are hospitable and respectful to strangers.³²

³¹ See Adontz, Armenia in the Period of Justinian.

The passage is fascinating for a number of reasons, all of which we do not have space to go into now. For present purposes, what is striking about the description is the isolated nature of the community and the primitive practices and texts they were able to maintain due to their never having been fully integrated into the mainstream Armenian church. T'ovma's reference to the community's "knowledge of the Psalms in the old translation of the Armenian teachers," indicates his impression that the community was an old one with origins in primitive Christianity. Their knowledge of liturgical and scriptural texts, such as the Psalms was likely oral, and as such subject to the natural changes that affect orally transmitted texts over time and for that reason differed from the version of the Psalms familiar to T'ovma.³³ T'ovma's linking of their identity with the "peasants of Syria" apparently derives from the community's own origin

³² Բնակութիւն նոցա ի խորածորս եւ ի փապարս լերանց եւ ի պրակս մայրեաց, ի գագաթունս լերանց. եւ բնակեն առանձին՝ ըստ տունս ազգաց, եւ այնչափ ի բացեայ են ի միմեանց, մինչ թէ ոք յարանց զաւրաւորաց ի բարձրաբերձ տեղեաց ուժգին խանչիցէ՝ հազիւ թէ ուրեք կարիցէ առնուլ զբոմբիւն ձայնին՝ իբրեւ ի վիմաց ինչ արձագան լինելոյ կարծիս բերելով: Եւ կէսքն վրիպեալք ի բնական հայրենի լեզուէն, յաղագս հեռաբնակն լինելոյ եւ անհամբոյրք միմեանց հանդիպեալք, եւ խաւսս միմեանց եղեալ կարկատուն մուրացածի բանիւք: Եւ այնքան խրթնի անծանաւթք պատահեն առ միմեանս, մինչեւ թարգմանաց անգամ կարաւտանան... Այլ եւ ի ժամանակս հասելոց թշնամեաց յերկիրն իւրեանց՝ գան միաբան լեռնայինքն յաւգնութիւն իշխանացն, զի են տիրասէրք... Եւ կոչին սոքա մեկնակազէնք սուրհանդակք, բնակեալք ի լերինն, որ բաժանէ ընդ Աղձնիս եւ ընդ Տարան: Եւ յաղագս խրթնի եւ անհետազաւտելի խաւսիցն եւ բարուցն կոչին Խութ, յորոց անուն եւ լեռանն Խոյթ անուանի: Եւ գիտեն զսաղմոսսն՝ զհին թարգմանեալսն վարդապետացն Հայոց, զոր հանապազ ի բերան ունին: Սոքա են գուհաճք Ասորոց, որ չուեցին զկնի Ադրամելքայ եւ Սանասարայ որդւոց Սենեքերիմ արքայի՝ թագաւորի Ասորեստանի եւ Նինուէի, յորոց անունն ինքեանք Սանասնայք զինքեանս անուանեն. եւ են հիւրասէրք, աւտարնկալք, պատուադիրք: T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik' II.7, MH 11:151.12–21, tr. Thomson, 187–88.

³³ It is tempting to connect their version of the Psalms with the earliest, Syriac stratum underlying the Armenian text of many biblical books, including the Psalms, however the differences in their version of the Psalms is probably due in fact to the reason mentioned, that it was an orally transmitted text. On the earliest strata of the Psalms and other Armenian biblical books, see Cowe, "The Bible in Armenian," 150; Cox, "Armenian Version," 246–47.

myth, by which they claimed to be descendants of Adrammelech and Sharezer, the sons of Sennacherib, king of Assyria, who according to 2 Kings 19:37, slew their father and “escaped into the land of Ararat (գերձան յերկիրն Արարադայ).”³⁴ This origin story was a popular one in the region of southern Armenia, with iterations reported in Xorenac‘i and the first cycle of the epic of Sasun.³⁵ The Christianity of the community may in fact have been derived from early missions associated with the Syriac church, which was active in this region of the Armenian oikoumené. Garsoïan argued for such an origin to the (Armenian) Paulicians and T‘ondrakites, as being the “Armenian Old Believers,” i.e., followers of the primitive Syriac-influenced form of Christianity that predated the Hellenization of the church in the fourth and fifth centuries.³⁶ Another community that remained outside the purview of the established church was the arewortik‘ (“children of the sun”), who maintained Zoroastrian and Armeno-Iranian folk beliefs and practices, and likewise endured in especially mountainous and remote regions even up until the modern period.³⁷

Like these other communities, the T‘ondrakites likely had remained relatively isolated and unknown, until the instability and dynamism of the period sparked the ambitions of Smbat. Located in the Borderlands and as such exposed to a variety of beliefs and peoples including local forms of Islam, the community seems to have adopted certain syncretistic elements and gained aspirations for autonomous political rule.³⁸ Smbat, the community’s leader in this period, is remembered in later Armenian sources as the founder of the T‘ondrakite heresy. Smbat hailed

³⁴ 2 Kings 19:37.

³⁵ See Movsēs Xorenac‘i History of Armenia, I.23. On the epic of Sasun, see Yeghiazaryan, Daredevils of Sasun; Kouymjian and Der Mugrdechian, David of Sassoun.

³⁶ Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, 220–230 at 230.

³⁷ On this community, see Russell, Zoroastrianism in Armenia, 515–39; idem, “Heresies.”

³⁸ Seta Dadoyan argues for understanding the T‘ondrakites as a syncretistic community characteristic of the Borderlands. See Dadoyan, Armenians in the Medieval Islamic World, 1:90–107.

from Zarehawan, a village in the province of Calkotn in the region of Ayrarat, not far north from T'ondrak.³⁹ Grigor Magistros claims that Smbat learned his erroneous and wicked beliefs from a “Persian doctor, astrologer, and magus” named Mjusik, which perhaps can be taken as an indication of the syncretistic nature of Smbat’s doctrine.⁴⁰ Based on this datum, Garsoïan suggested the possibility that Smbat may have been influenced by the messianic Islamic notion of the mahdī, like the case of Bābak.⁴¹ Grigor of Narek notes how Smbat referred to himself as “Christ,” and relates how when the Qaysite emīr, Abū’l-Ward had Smbat put to death, the former mocked the latter first by saying:

Christ rose on the third day. Now, since you call yourself ‘Christ,’ I will kill you and bury you, and you come back to life on the thirtieth day. Then, I’ll know that you are Christ, even though it’ll be so many more days later that you will be resurrected.⁴²

One notes the parallel here to the case of Bābak mentioned above. Although there is much less information on the political aspirations or activity of Smbat and the community that followed him, one may surmise that like Bābak and the Khurramī community, they held political aspirations for local autonomy, though on a much smaller scale than that of the Khurramī. Like Bābak, Smbat was eventually captured and put to death by an Arab emir, in this case the Qaysite Abū’l-Ward. Around this same period, the Qaysites under Abū’l-Ward were solidifying their rule in Apahunik’ and suppressing rival claimants. After the expeditions of Bughā’l Kabīr, they

³⁹ Grigor Magistros, Letters-II no. 4 [67], MH 16:196.35; Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 55, p. 63; map 91, p. 115.

⁴⁰ Ուսեալ գչար մորութիւն յումեմնէ պարսկական բժշկէ եւ յաստեղաբաշխէ մոգէ, զոր Մջուսիկդ կոչէք: Grigor Magistros, Letters-II no. 4 [67], MH 16:196.32.

⁴¹ Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, 148 n. 169. According to Achaëan, the name derives from a form of the Armenian name Mrjwnik (Մրջիւնիկ), and thus some scholars have supposed that Smbat in fact learned his teachings from an Armenian, who may have been affiliated with Persian magi. See Achaëan, Hayerēn armatakan bararan, s.v. “Mrjwnik;” Nersessian, Tondrakian Movement, 46.

⁴² Քրիստոս յերրոր աւուր յարեաւ, արդ, մինչ դու գրեզ Քրիստոս անուանես, սպանանեմ գրեզ եւ թաղեմ, եւ դու գկնի լ. աւուր կենդանացիր. ես գիտեմ, թէ Քրիստոս իցես, թէ պէտ այնքան աւուրբք բազմաւք յետոյ յարիցես: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1088.24.

expanded even further, establishing a center at Manazkert, from where they remained a political force for the next century.⁴³ The Tʿondrakites continued to remain in the region, but do not seem to have renewed their aspirations for political autonomy, instead persisting under the radar. The next hundred years contained further political dynamism and societal and ecclesiastical crises, after which the Tʿondrakite label reemerges in the sources as a term of opprobrium deployed against ascetic, spiritualist figures. Before we reflect on this evolution, it will be helpful to review some of these major societal and ecclesiastical controversies that provide some of the contextual backdrop to the height of this second phase of the controversy that began in the middle of the tenth century.

Economic Inequality and Revolts in Siwnikʿ

As reviewed in the second chapter, the boom in the overall economy, fueled largely by the international trade routes running through Armenia, led to increased wealth in the hands of the major noble dynastic families (Bagratuni, Arcruni, Siwni). But the economic, trade, and building boom had its darker side. The wealth disparity between rich and poor seems to have been markedly increased in this period, contributing to feelings of discontent on the part of the lower classes of society, who felt taken advantage of by landholders and landholding institutions. This included ecclesiastical institutions, notably the newly founded and expanding cenobitic monasteries that were discussed in the previous chapter. In general, the Church, aligned with the noble families, became wealthier and more prosperous in this period, the many building projects and endowments made to churches and monasteries bearing witness to this. For example, Sewan monastery (Sewanavank⁴⁴), founded between 871–74, was given five villages on the banks of Lake Sewan, privileges to the prime hunting location of Křakcin, and orchards in Garni, Erevan, and elsewhere.⁴⁵ A vivid description of the wealth accumulated by members of the hierarchy is given in a passage by Matt'ēos Urhayec'i, who refers to the wealth seized by the Seljuk general Ibrāhīm from the chorepiscopus Dawt'uk, when the Seljuks captured Arcn, one of the major commercial cities of the period, in the eleventh century: "I have often heard it said by many people that when Abrihim (Ibrāhīm) seized his [the k'orepiskopos Dawt'uk's] treasury, forty camels carried away his treasure and eight hundred oxen [yoked together] in sixes went forth from his household."⁴⁶ While the exact numbers are no doubt an exaggeration, bearing as the episode does the tell-tale signs of oral, folk tale, it nevertheless vividly illustrates the great wealth that had been accumulated by some hierarchs during this period and the way their wealthy status was perceived by the local population.

⁴³ On the Qaysites, see Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 51–53.

The expansion of a business, merchant class in the commercial cities of the Armenian oikoumené also contributed to an increased disparity between the well-to-do in urban settings and the poor peasants in rural settings. Sources from the period contain indications of growing discontentment on the part of rural peasants, whose position was unchanged or worsened in comparison to mercantile businessman in the urban centers, who were growing wealthy thanks to increased commercial activity.⁴⁷ Aristakēs Lastivertc'i, writing about what precipitated the fall of Arcn, says:

⁴⁴ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 728, p. 129.

⁴⁵ Pogossian, "Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan," 203.

⁴⁶ Բայց զայս բազում անգամ լուեալ է մեր ի բազմաց յաղագս քորեպիսկոպոսին՝ որ ասէին Դաւթուկ, եթէ զգանձատունն նորա Աբրիհիմն էառ եւ քառասուն ուղտ բարձան զգանձարանն նորա, ութ հարիւր վեցկի եզանց երանէին ի տանէ նորա: Matt'ēos Urhayec'i, Chronicle I.92, ed. Adamean and Tēr-Mik'ayelean, 103.

⁴⁷ On this topic, see Manandian, Trade and Cities, 136–43; Greenwood, "Aristakes Lastivertc'i and Armenian Urban Consciousness."

Love of silver became more honored than love of God, and mammon more than Christ. At that time, all discretion of the orders was subverted and turned to disorder. The princes [of Arcn] became the companions of thieves, nefarious, servants of silver. The city's judges took bribes and robbed the just for the sake of bribes. They did not take up the case of orphans and did not incline to the rights of widows. Usury and speculation became the norm. Wheat was produced in such excess that the land was polluted, its womb blocked from bearing crops at the proper time to feed mankind. He who defrauded his friend boasted that he was wise, and he who seized [the property of others] said, 'I am mighty.' And the wealthy seized the fields and homes of the neighboring poor.⁴⁸

Likewise, after describing the invasion and capture of Ani by the Seljuks, the same historian writes:

This is the portion of unjust cities, which build themselves upon the blood of strangers, make themselves wealthy by the sweat of the poor, strengthen their homes through usury and injustice, and have no regard for being charitable to the poor and needy.⁴⁹

While the wealth gap must have been a marked feature of the period, one of course cannot take vivid portrayals such as these as straightforward depictions of contemporary reality. Aristakēs and Matt'ēos were both clerical historians with little understanding of economics, migration, or political cause and effect. Instead, they turned to Scriptural paradigms in order to explain the catastrophic events of the mid-eleventh century. As mentioned above, the reason for the invasion and fall of Arcn and Ani given by Aristakēs follows the biblical model outlined in the Deuteronomistic historian and the prophets of attributing the destruction of Jerusalem to social injustice and exploitation of the poor, orphans, and widows on the part of the rulers and wealthy.⁵⁰ Aristakēs goes on to cite directly Deuteronomy and Isaiah after his description of the corrupt behavior of Arcn’s princes, judges, and wealthy businessmen.

⁴⁸ Յարգի եղեւ արծաթսիրութիւն քան զաստուածսիրութիւն, եւ մամոնայ քան զՔրիստոս. յայնժամ ամենայն համեստութիւն կարգաց զառածեալ՝ յանկարգութիւն դարձաւ: Իշխանք սորա գողակիցք եղեն գողոց, վրիժագործք եւ արծաթոյ ծառայք. դատաւորք սորա կաշառառուք եւ վասն կաշառոյ գողանային զիրաւունս. դատաստան որբոց ոչ առնէին, եւ յիրաւունս այրեաց ոչ խոնարհէին: Վաշխից եւ տոկոսեաց արէնք եղան, եւ ցորենոյ բազմապատկութիւն, որով երկիր պղծի եւ արգելու զարգանդ առ ի տալոյ զպտուղ ի ժամու իւրում առ ի կերակուր մարդկան: Որ խաբէր զրնկերն, պարծէր իմաստուն գոլ, եւ որ յափշտակէր, ասէր «Ես հզաւր եմ»: Զտունս տնակից աղքատացն, եւ զսահմանս անդաստանաց նոցա յափշտակէին մեծատունքն: Aristakēs Lastivertc'i, History 12, MH 16:572–73.10–14.

⁴⁹ Այս է բաժին անիրաւ քաղաքաց, որ շինեն զինքնեանս արեամբ աւտարաց, եւ ի քրտանց տնանկաց փարթամանան, եւ ի վաշխից եւ յանիրաւութեանց գտունս իւրեանց ամրացուցանեն. եւ ինքնեանք զմիտս իւրեանց անողորմ ունելով առ աղքատս եւ տնանկս: Aristakēs Lastivertc'i, History 12, MH 16:625.18.

Despite this, it seems beyond question that there was an increase in wealth disparity between rich and poor, with great wealth being accumulated by the ruling class, the church, and those benefitting from mercantile and urban activity. That is, despite the booming economy, the condition of the poor seems to have grown worse, at least in relative terms when compared to the wealth accumulated by the upper classes. As sociological and economic research has suggested, increased economic inequality leads to an increase in (violent) crime, especially when that wealth is visibly demonstrated.⁵¹ Along with the political instability of the period, this seems to be one of the major underlying explanations for the series of violent revolts that took place in this period against wealthy institutions. The most striking example is the series of revolts in Siwnik’, directed principally against the monastery of Tat’ew, then See of the metropolitan of Siwnik’. The monastery had been founded in 839 to be a permanent locale for the prestigious bishop of Siwnik’, and over the course of the next century its possessions were greatly enlarged by a series of donations of villages and estates by Siwnid noblemen, as well as costly, sacred paraphernalia, such as a relic of the True Cross.⁵²

Disruptions to the social order brought about by conflicts between the Bagratid king and the ostikan were another factor that set the stage for the revolts and anarchic period that ensued. During ostikan Yūsuf’s conflicts with the Bagratunis, the former led a series of military expeditions throughout mostly the eastern portions of Armīniya (Yūsuf then had his main seat at ⁵⁰ Cowe, “Two Tales of a City,” 98–102.

⁵¹ Fajnzylber, Lederman, and Loayza, “Inequality and Violent Crime;” Hicks and Hicks, “Jealous of the Joneses;” Anser, Yousaf, Nassani, et al. “Dynamic linkages between poverty, inequality, crime, and social expenditures.”

⁵² Step’anos Ōrbelean details these in the thirty-ninth and fortieth chapters of the History of Siwnik’.

P'artaw) and from there into Siwnik' and other areas of the Bagratid realm. The thirteenth-century historian and metropolitan of Siwnik', Step'anos Ōrbelean, notes the great devastation wrought by the armies of Yūsuf upon the local population and the fact that the princes of Siwnik' had fled from their territory in order to protect themselves, leaving the land and local population defenseless.⁵³ This seems to have exposed the local population to mistreatment by Yūsuf's army. The food supply and agricultural economy was probably disrupted, and villages were likely exposed to food shortages or starvation. Without the local princes to enforce peace, the territory fell into a period of literal anarchy. During this time, villagers from the nearby fortress town of C'ur, described by Ōrbelean as “godless bandits,” invaded the wealthy monastery and episcopal see of Tat'ew and plundered it.⁵⁴ As Ōrbelean notes in an earlier chapter, the village and fortress of C'ur along with its fields had been one of the endowments given to the monastery and episcopal see of Tat'ew.⁵⁵ Ōrbelean's labeling of the invaders as “bandits (հըռւղաւիթ)” should perhaps be taken not merely as a pejorative designation, but perhaps quite literally. Along with the uptick of trade in the region and traffic along the international trade routes, social banditry would naturally have arisen as a means of income for the lower classes and poor in villages.⁵⁶ Banditry in this region continued as a way of life and means of economic activity up until the modern period.⁵⁷ Ōrbelean recalls as part of the plunder the bandits intentionally breaking the sacred vessels that held the chrism and pouring it out on the ground:

Those who were godless, immoral bandits brought many and great sorrows upon the holy congregation of Tat'ew. One day they came by night at an unexpected hour and began raiding and looting the church, workshops, and monks' chambers. And they were seeking to kill the bishop, but did not find him. Then they slew with the sword some of the elderly

⁵³ Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 38.

⁵⁴ Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 48.

⁵⁵ See Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 42.

⁵⁶ On the phenomenon of social banditry, see the classic study by Hobsbawm, Bandits.

⁵⁷ For later manifestations of the phenomenon in the region, see Bobrovnikov, “Abrek;” Boratov, “Kōroghlu.”

and drove others off. Whatever they found they took with them and went back to their fortress [C'ur]. They also carried off the meron, contained in a silver vessel, and dumped it out on a rock.⁵⁸

Noting the specific and intentional destruction of liturgical items and sacred vessels, specifically the miwron (chrism, holy oil), some scholars have connected this activity to influence from the T'ondrakians, whether being perpetrated by avowed followers of the sect or conducted under the influence of their iconoclastic beliefs.⁵⁹ However, neither Ōrbelean nor the contemporary documents he includes in his history mention the T'ondrakians in connection with the incident, nor do we have any indication from other premodern sources of T'ondrakian activity extending this far east in Armenia.⁶⁰ It is rather more likely that the motivation in this case was socio-economic. The villagers/bandits may have revolted against the monastery due to their own desperation and deprivation and the latter's visible opulence. One may infer the villagers' sense of being taken advantage of by the monastery and monks, who themselves did not engage in agricultural labor, and instead were supported by the work of the villagers. Such feelings could lead to violent crime during periods of desperation or when those guarding the monastery (the local princes) were absent from the scene. In this instance, the destruction of the miwron could be seen as an act of protest/vengeance/indignation, hitting the monks where it hurt, perhaps akin to the burning of the national flag during a modern, political protest. Alternatively, the villagers/bandits may simply have seen an opportunity for personal advantage with the local princes absent. If motivated solely by profit (and acting less immediately out of desperation or a desire for revenge), the miwron may simply have been emptied out of the costly, silver vessel so that it could then be sold or melted down and repurposed.

⁵⁸ Բագուժ և մեծամեծ վիշտս հասուցանէին սուրբ ուխտին Տաթեւոյ բնակիչք Յուրայ բերդին, որք էին անաստուածք, Ժպիրհք եւ ելուզակք: Եւ յաւուր միում եկեալ ի գիշերի յեղակարծ ժամու, սկսան կողոպտել զեկեղեցին եւ զգործատներն եւ զյարկսն կրօնաւորաց. եւ խնդրէին զեպիսկոպոսն զի ապանցեն, եւ ոչ գտին. ապա գոմանս ի ծերոցն սրով հարին և զայլսն փախստական արարին. զոր ինչ գտին ինքեանք՝ առեալ գնացին ի բերդն (Յուրայ). տարան և արծաթի սափորով զմեռոնն եւ վայթեցին ընդ քարն: Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik՝ 48, ed. Shahnazareants՝, 247.

⁵⁹ See, for example, Ut'mazean, Siwnik՝ Է XI-X darrerum, 258–60.

⁶⁰ In fact, Ōrbelean does not mention the T'ondrakians at all in his History.

Since the princes remained absent, raids on the monastery were repeated a few more times. Once the princes finally returned, they quelled the anarchy and the bishop issued a fierce anathema against the village's perpetrators.⁶¹ Further revolts occurred in connection with other villages owned by Tat'ew monastery in the 930s, namely the villages of Aweldašt and Tamalekk'. Ōrbelean relates that the former was "full of bandits (լի էր ելուզակ մարդովք)" and the latter was "a lair for rebels (ապստամբանոց)," who continued to wreak havoc on the monks of Tat'ew.⁶² Finally, at the end of the century, the villagers of C'ur once again rose up violently against the episcopal see, this time assassinating then Bishop Yakob II. As punishment, the Siwnid ruler Vasak of Bałk' attacked and razed the fortress and village, leaving it uninhabitable thereafter.

The historian and catholicos contemporary to this period, Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc'i, writing about the unrest and anarchy in the same era, likewise provides an indication of the sentiments of the peasants against the ruling class, and the acts of rebellion and anarchy that marked the period throughout Greater Armenia, as there was a scramble to seize political power during the period of dynamic unrest:

The lowly tried to surpass the wealthy, and the servants, in accordance with Solomon, maneuvered to make their masters crawl on the ground, and mount the fiery steeds of the latter. They defied those who trampled them under foot and became arrogant in a great rebellion.⁶³

⁶¹ Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 48.

⁶² Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 49, 51, ed. Shahnazareants', 257, 270. See Ut'mazeian, Siwnik' ē XI-X darerum, 273–75; Dadoyan, Armenians in the Medieval Islamic World, 1:120.

⁶³ Նուագուունքն քան զմեծամեծսն ձեռներէց լինել ջանային, եւ ծառայքն ըստ Սողոմոնի հնարէին, զի զտեսարս տրեխաւորեալ, ի գետնի գնացուցեն, եւ ինքեանք ելցեն յերկվարս ահապարանոցս եւ առաթուր հարողս՝

He then goes on to describe the power grabs made by the major noble dynasts to take advantage of the turmoil and expand their own territories at the expense of lesser lords. All the above-cited incidents provide a vivid glimpse into this period of significant social unrest prompted by political upheaval and socio-economic disparity. Such unrest and disorder caused great fear and alarm on the part of the church hierarchy, who as mentioned above in general were aligned with and patronized by the ruling élite and thus benefitted from a stable social order, themselves also liable to attack during instances of anarchic unrest.

ECCLESIASTICAL CRISES AND CONTROVERSIES

Separatism and Centrifugal Tendencies in Siwnik' and Caucasian Albania

The first chapter discussed the fragmentation of political rule in the Armenian oikoumené in the tenth century, as smaller kingdoms were formed first in Vaspurakan then in Siwnik' and then when the Bagratid realm itself fragmented into smaller kingdoms. These political tendencies were reflected on the ecclesiastical plane as well, specifically with regard to the metropolitan of Siwnik' and the catholicos of Ałuank'. Separatist tendencies had a long history in both regions, for instance during the late sixth and early seventh century, a watershed moment in regard to the ecclesiastical relations between the Churches of the Caucasus. The expansion of the Byzantine empire eastwards against the Sasanians in the late sixth century provided an apt opportunity to attempt to draw the Christian communities in the Caucasus more tightly into the imperial orbit and overtures were made to the leading ecclesiasts. The Patriarchate of Jerusalem also played an active role in supporting the Byzantine pro-Chalcedonian agenda, by, for example, writing letters in support of the imperial church to the leaders of the Caucasian churches.⁶⁴ When the Catholicos Movsēs II Eḥivardec‘i refused to cooperate with the imperial agenda, an anti-catholicos, Yovhannēs Bagaranc‘i, was installed, and Chalcedonianism was imposed on the regions under the Byzantine Empire’s expanding borders. Non-Chalcedonians then fled eastwards across the border into Sasanian territory.⁶⁵ Vrt‘anēs, the metropolitan of Siwnik‘ — then the foremost episcopacy in Greater Armenia and aspiring for autocephaly — broke with the Armenian catholicos and aligned himself with the catholicos of Albania, being consecrated by him instead. Both hierarchs favored Chalcedonianism, or at least were accused of doing so. The break of the Siwnik‘ episcopacy from the Armenian Catholicos persisted with Vrt‘anēs’ successors until 607, when through the intervention of Smbat Bagratuni, K‘ristap‘or, one of the successors of Vrt‘anēs, was compelled to submit to Catholicos Abraham I Aḥbat‘anec‘i. In this same period, the permanent break between the Iberian and Armenian churches took place, with the separation of Catholicos K‘iwriion of Iberia from the Armenian Church, and the former’s formal alignment with the Byzantine Church. The patriarchate of Jerusalem continued its active role in promoting Chalcedonianism among the non-Chalcedonian churches of the Caucasus in subsequent centuries, by, for example, translating texts defending dyophysite theology and disseminating them in the region.⁶⁶

Խրոխտացեալք եւ սոնքացեալք մեծաւ ապստամբութեամբ: Yovhannēs Drasxanakertci, History of Armenia 52, MH 11:517.9; tr. Maksoudian, 186 (modified).

The situation reached another climax in the tenth century. Step‘anos Orbelean reports that the metropolitan of Siwnik‘, Yakob, had taken advantage of the unstable political conditions in the late ninth and early tenth centuries to pull away from the Catholicos of Armenia and, like in the previous era, lean towards Chalcedonianism along with the catholicos of Ałuank', Sahak.⁶⁷ Likewise, the Caucasian Albanian catholicos took advantage of the same conditions to operate autonomously. Orbelean notes that since the time of Gēorg II (877–897), the Albanian catholicos had stopped being consecrated by the Armenian catholicos, an abnormal situation that persisted for the next five catholicoi of Caucasian Albania.⁶⁸ In 918, Yakob I, nephew of Catholicos Yovhannēs V “the Historian” (sed. 898 – 924) became bishop of Siwnik' (sed. 918–958). Due to the turmoil of the period and the move of the Armenian catholicos from Duin to Vaspurakan and thus further away from Siwnik', Yakob began to receive the holy chrism (miwron) from the neighboring catholicos of Albania, Sahak (sed. ca. 929–949), instead of the catholicos of Armenia.⁶⁹ When Anania of Mokka' became catholicos, he attempted to put an end to this irregularity and to confirm his preeminence over the bishop of Siwnik' and catholicos of Albania by demanding their formal submission to him in person. When the two did not respond to Anania's summons, he decided to go to them. Arriving first in Siwnik', he demanded and received the formal submission of the metropolitan of Siwnik' but was prevented from going to Caucasian Albania by other obligations in 947.⁷⁰

⁶⁴ For one such letter, from the Patriarch John IV to the Albanian Catholicos Abas, see Terian, “Monastic Turmoil.”

⁶⁵ This schism lasted until 610/11, when the Sasanians arrested the anti-catholicos Yovhannēs and deported him to Hamadhan. Mahé, “L’église arménienne,” 462.

⁶⁶ Cowe, “Armenian Job Fragment,” 156.

When the catholicos of Ałuank', Sahak, died shortly thereafter, his brother and successor, Gagik, was consecrated once again without the consent or participation of the Armenian ⁶⁷ The events related to this episode are detailed in Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 52, ed. Shahnazareants', 274–87.

⁶⁸ Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 52, ed. Shahnazareants', 276. See also Mahé, “L'égglise arménienne,” 507.

⁶⁹ Used in rites of consecration, anointing, and ordination, only the Catholicos has the right to consecrate the miwron, which is then distributed to bishops and from them to individual churches/monasteries. It is thus symbolic of the supreme authority of the Catholicos and the dependence of other bishops upon him.

⁷⁰ He was called back to conduct a royal funeral, the wife of Abas I Bagratuni (r. 929–953). Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 52, ed. Shahnazareants', 276–77; Mahé, “L'égglise arméniennes,” 508.

catholicos. Catholicos Anania ordered the princes of Albania not to recognize him. All but one — named Senek‘erim — followed Catholicos Anania’s orders, and they sent to him a certain Yōnan to be consecrated by Anania as catholicos. Catholicos Anania ordained him and dispatched him to Caucasian Albania, but Gagik refused to cede his position. The loyalties of the local nobility were divided between the two. Catholicos Anania again arrived in person and summoned all the bishops and princes of the land to council. Ōrbelean relates that he ordered for a History of Albania to be brought to him, and by referring to it, showed how the catholicos of Ałuank‘ had always been tributaries of the Armenian catholicos, except during scattered instances of schism.⁷¹ The Caucasian Albanians agreed to abide by this ecclesiastical norm and Catholicos Anania then went on to Siwnik‘ to attempt to establish the same.

The metropolitan, Yakob, in order to avoid meeting Catholicos Anania, fled to Bałk‘ and stayed with the prince of the region, Juanšēr, refusing to meet with the catholicos. Enraged, Catholicos Anania had the monastery of Tat‘ew, the seat of the bishop, greatly damaged and returned to his See. Once he had left the region, the new catholicos of the Caucasian Albanians, Gagik, violated his earlier promise to remain loyal to the Armenian catholicos, and along with the archbishop of Siwnik‘, both hierarchs persisted in acting autonomously for another ten years. By chance, both died in the year 958. According to Ōrbelean, Anania took this as an answer to prayer and a divine sign and went to Siwnik‘ in order to reestablish ecclesiastical norms.⁷² He had Tat‘ew rebuilt and reconstituted as the episcopal see. Prince Juanšēr, who had earlier protected Yakob, made peace with Anania by submitting to him through a public confession, and in return, Anania ordained his son Vahan to be the new archbishop of Siwnik‘, obtaining the promise that the bishop of Siwnik' would stay loyal and submissive to the catholicos of Armenia.⁷³ In order to bring down the prestige of the episcopacy and the symbolic authority of the new bishop, Anania removed certain items from Tat'ew, including a luxurious processional cross that was carried before the bishop during services and had been conceded as a token of respect during the earlier period of contention in the seventh century, as well as a costly and precious staff, and a luxurious cushion.⁷⁴ Thus, this disciplinary measure implied the symbolic removal of items used to express Siwnian independence and authority. Finally, he proceeded to Caucasian Albania but was again recalled because of the funeral of an important noble dynast.⁷⁵ Preempting Anania's return, the leading lords of Caucasian Albania sent Dawit' of Xotakerac' monastery to Catholicos Anania to be ordained by him along with their promise to abide by the desired norms.⁷⁶ Thus ended the temporary schism and Catholicos Anania succeeded in securing the submission of the archbishop of Siwnik' and the Caucasian Albanian catholicos.

⁷¹ Step‘anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik‘ 52, ed. Shahnazareants‘, 278–82.

⁷² Step‘anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik‘ 52, ed. Shahnazareants‘, 283–84.

⁷³ Vahan Siwnec'i was later elected catholicos of Armenia (sed. 965/6–970) after the death of Anania Mokac'i. As Ōrbelean relates in the next chapter, he introduced icons from Iberia into Armenian churches. This was perceived as too pro-Chalcedonian at a time when an anti-Chalcedonian sentiment was severe among certain segments of the Armenian hierarchy (on which, see chapter 5). Step'anos Tarōnec'i, alive during the crisis in question, says that Vahan "expressed a desire to create amity and agreeable relations with the Chalcedonians through epistles (Սա ընդ քաղկեդոնականս սիրելութիւնն եւ հաճութիւնն կամեցաւ առնել թղթովք).” Universal History III.8. Complaints were made to the Bagratuni king who called a council at Ani to see what should be done. Vahan fled to Vaspurakan and took refuge with Apusahl Hamazasp (953/8–972), son of Gagik Arcruni. A new catholicos was elected in his place (Step'anos Sewanc'i). Both anathematized the other. Catholicos Step'anos went with some monks, vardapets, and a nobleman named Babkēn from Siwnik' in order to try to resolve the conflict. They were imprisoned at Alt'amar. The others were released but Catholicos Step'anos was held in captivity in the fortress of Kotork'. After a couple years, both died within a short time of each other (Step'anos still in captivity). The schism was resolved when Xaç'ik Aršaruni was elected Catholicos (sed. 972/3–990/1). See Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 53; Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.8.

⁷⁴ These were not restored until the Catholicate of Sargis (992/3–1019) when Yovhannēs was bishop of Siwnik'. See Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 52, ed. Shahnazareants', 285.

⁷⁵ On this occasion, it was Grigor Arcruni. Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 52, ed. Shahnazareants', 285–86.

⁷⁶ Step'anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik' 52, ed. Shahnazareants', 286.

Dissidence and Ecclesiological Dispute: The Case of Xosrov Anjewac‘i

Catholicos Anania of Mokk‘ emerges in the period as a powerful catholicos seeking to bring order and stability to the chaotic and irregular situation that had been caused by unstable and disorderly political and ecclesiastical events in Armenia over the last half century. As such, he was particularly attuned to any separatist tendencies or challenges to his authority on the part of other bishops or high-ranking ecclesiastics, as well as pro-Byzantine or pro-Chalcedonian leanings, which as in the above instance were often correlated together. Both hierarchical and doctrinal dissidence were interpreted by him as a threat both to the integrity of the Armenian Church and the supreme authority of the head of that Church, especially in the wake of the unstable political conditions of the time and the Byzantine Empire’s expansion.

This forms the backdrop to another controversy surrounding the episcopal hierarchy and pro-Chalcedonianism during the catholicate of Anania Mokac‘i, which brings us into Vaspurakan and closer to Narekavank‘. This time the situation involved Xosrov, the father of Grigor of Narek and relative through marriage with Anania of Narek, who had been ordained bishop of Anjewac‘ik‘ by Catholicos Anania (ca. 950). Xosrov, if not directly involved in the catholicos’ dispute with the metropolitan of Siwnik‘ and the Albanian catholicos,⁷⁷ was certainly responding to the situation when he claimed that the distinction between the episcopal ranks of bishop, archbishop, metropolitan, and patriarch (catholicos) had only an administrative distinction and not a sacramental one, and therefore the catholicos had no right to demand the absolute submission and obedience of other bishops.⁷⁸ According to a document written by Catholicos Anania to explain why he anathematized Xosrov Anjewac‘i, the latter had claimed that “angels and archangels enjoyed equal honor and glory and consequently the patriarch and bishop shared equal glory and honor” and that “there is one throne and one dignity for the patriarch and bishop.”⁷⁹

⁷⁷ There is an allusion to his involvement in Step‘anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik‘ 52, ed. Shahnazareants‘, 276.

⁷⁸ Cowe, “Introduction” in Xosrov Anjewac‘i, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy, 8.

Significantly, Xosrov was also censured for his Byzantinophilia and presumed pro-Chalcedonianism.⁸⁰ Earlier in the document, the Catholicos had noted his “absurd (անհեղեղ)” custom of pronouncing certain words in closer accordance with their Greek pronunciation (citing as examples, his saying kirakē as kiwriakē and Erusalem as Erusalēm).⁸¹ Likewise, Xosrov had claimed that liturgical crosses need not be blessed before being venerated by the faithful, a point of dispute in Byzantine/Armenian polemical correspondence, where here Xosrov’s view aligns with Byzantine norms over and against Armenian ones.⁸² As mentioned in the first chapter and as will be discussed further in the next, the period of the catholicate of Anania Mokac’i and Xaç’ik Aršaruni (covering roughly the second half of the tenth century) marks a major turning point in Chalcedonian/non-Chalcedonian ecclesiastical and political relations. The preceding hundred years — its beginning marked by the council of Širakavan in 862 — of non-confrontation and relative toleration took a sour turn at precisely this time.⁸³ Certainly, the Byzantine political expansion into Armenia and its imperialistic political and ecclesiastical policy, which picked up pace in the second half of the tenth century lies heavy in the background ⁷⁹ Մի պատիւ եւ մի փառք հրեշտակաց եւ հրեշտակապետաց, ըստ նմին՝ մի փառք եւ մի պատիւ հայրապետին եւ եպիսկոպոսին...մի աթոռ է եւ մի պատիւ հայրապետին եւ եպիսկոպոսին: Anania of Mokka, “The Reason for Anathematizing Xosrov, Bishop of Anjewac’ik’ by the Lord Anania, Catholicos of Armenia,” MH 10:276.15–17, trans. Cowe, 12–13.

⁸⁰ He is remembered in the same way by Step’anos Ōrbelean. See History of Siwnik’ 52, ed. Shahnazareants’, 276.

⁸¹ Սկսաւ նախ զբարբառն գելակի արձակել՝ ըստ յունարէն լեզուոյն զկիրակէն կիւռիակէ կոչել եւ զԵրուսաղէմ՝ Երուսաղէմ, եւ որ սոցին նման է, ի սոյն յառեալ բարբառ: Իսկ զկնի այսորիկ ապա այլ յառաջեաց բաջարմունս անհեղեղս: Anania of Mokka, “The Reason for Anathematizing Xosrov, Bishop of Anjewac’ik’ by the Lord Anania, Catholicos of Armenia,” MH 10:276.8–9, trans. Cowe, 12.

⁸² Cowe, “Introduction” in Xosrov Anjewac’i, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy, 7.

⁸³ Maksoudian, “Chalcedonian Issue;” Cowe, “Introduction” in Xosrov Anjewac’i, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy, 5 n. 17.

of these internal controversies. In another letter, Anania Mokac‘i referred to dyophysitism as a cancer spreading throughout the Armenia realm.⁸⁴ For present purposes, the case of Xosrov marks another instance of the way in which the integrity of the Armenian Church and the authority of the catholicos in this period was perceived as being under threat — this time by an element from Vaspurakan and closely associated with Narek monastery — and the steps Catholicos Anania took to ensure order, conformity, and submission.

T‘ondrakec‘i: The Invention of a Heretical Type

By the mid-tenth and into the early eleventh century, abbots such as Anania at Narek and that of Kčaw monastery, as well as ascetic, reformist bishops like Yakobos of Hark‘ were denounced and branded with the label “T‘ondrakec‘i.” To understand how the term evolved such that it could be applied in this century to bishops, abbots, and monks, one must first establish what the T‘ondrakite label came to signify in the eyes of establishment churchmen. Then, one may see how reformist bishops and spiritualist abbots and monks could be seen to pose a typologically similar threat to that posed by the T‘ondrakites.

Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, whose Universal History was commissioned by Catholicos Sargis I Sewanc‘i, crystallizes the establishment Church’s view in a one-line description he gives of Smbat of Zarehawan, calling him the “opponent of all Christian institutions [or hierarchies]”⁸⁵ The word translated here as ‘institution’ or ‘hierarchy’ is karg (կարգ), the Armenian equivalent of Greek τάξις or Latin ordo, and conveys the sense of ‘order, rank, class, ordination, hierarchy, institution.’ For example, it is used to speak of the angelic ranks or hierarchy, the different ranks or classes within the church, such as the episcopal rank or priestly class, or in general in reference to the various classes of society, or the arrangement of creatures and beings in general in an ordered arrangement or hierarchy.⁸⁶ According to the memory of a later ecclesiastical writer such as Step‘anos, this is the chief significance of “Tondrakec‘i” — one who stands opposed to the institutions, orders, and hierarchies of the church, society, and the natural order.

⁸⁴ աղանդ Քաղկեդոնի, որ յաշխարհիս Հայոց իբր քաղցկեղ ճարակէր եւ զբոլոր աշխարհս էր կալեալ: Anania of Mokk‘, “Concerning the Rebellion of the House of the Albanians, Whose Ordination for Years Was outside of the Throne of the Holy Illuminator” MH 10:259.40. See Terian, “Gregory of Narek,” 283.

⁸⁵ Հակառակ ամենայն քրիստոնէական կարգաց: Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.3, MH 15:742.8; tr. Greenwood, 214.

Grigor of Narek, in his “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” outlines fourteen central points meant to summarize the errors of the T‘ondrakians. He opens this discussion with a summary statement quite similar to that of Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, saying that they have “renounced and abolished much that is divine and all that is apostolic from the divine institutions (կարգաց).”⁸⁷ Grigor, like Step‘anos, here uses the word karg, which reinforces the way in which the T‘ondrakites were perceived as a threat to the institutions and hierarchical order of the establishment church. As mentioned above, Grigor refers multiple times to the treatise of Anania against the T‘ondrakites, and the fourteen points he presents against the community, which flesh out the ways in which they reject the church’s institutions, are understood to be an outline summary of the main points of discussion that Anania treated at greater length in his longer treatise. They are worth quoting in full. Grigor says that they have renounced the following:

1. Ordination, which the Apostles received from Christ.⁸⁸

⁸⁶ ԿԱՐԳ ասի եւ յայլ գիրս Դասակարգութիւն հրեշտակաց, կարգաւորութիւն եկեղեցական աստիճանաց, մանաւանդ քահանայութիւն, եւ եպիսկոպոսութիւն. կրօնք միանձանց, եւ որոշումն ամենայն վիճակի մարդկան, եւ արարածոց առ հասարակ, եւ ամենայն բանից եւ գործոց: NBHL, s.v. կարգ.

⁸⁷ Բազում ինչ աստուածային եւ առաքելական ամենայն ինչ ուրացեալ է ի նոցանէ եւ խափանեալ յաստուածային կարգաց: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.4.

⁸⁸ Ձեռնադրութիւնն, զոր առաքեալքն ի Քրիստոսէ ընկալան: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.5.

2. Communion of his body, about which the Apostle said, “By tasting the bread of communion, we receive and taste God himself joined to flesh.”⁸⁹ But Smbat taught that this wonderful mystery is just a meal for the common [people].⁹⁰
3. The Birth through spiritual pangs, by water and by Spirit, which, as has been made known, produces sons of God⁹¹ — he taught them is just the filthy dregs of bath water (Ջուր լուալեաց).⁹²
4. And the blessed Lord’s Day, on which he created the primal light and perfected it with the light of his Resurrection, and with it ordained the life-giving light of his Second Coming. That icon of a venerable day, he interpreted as on par with the other [ordinary] days.⁹³

And now, which of the following [institutions/practices], which we know them to have abolished, is not apostolic or divine:⁹⁴

5. Bending the knees in sacramental supplication, although the Creator of all things himself bowed down and bent the knee.⁹⁵
6. The Font is renounced by them, in which Christ himself was baptized.⁹⁶
7. The Communion of immortality, which the Lord himself gave to all to taste.⁹⁷
8. [They engage in] dirty, indiscriminate debauchery, whereas the Lord established the prohibition of even a glance.⁹⁸
9. [They reject] the venerated Sign,⁹⁹ which God-become-man raised and bore on his own shoulder, as his own glory and power.¹⁰⁰

⁸⁹ See 1 Cor. 10:16–17.

⁹⁰ Եւ հաղորդութիւն մարմնոյն նորա՝ զոր ասաց առաքեալ եթէ զհացն հաղորդութեան ճաշակելով զնոյն ինքն զԱստուած միացեալ ի մարմնի ընդունիմք եւ ճաշակեմք, զոր Սմբատ հասարակաց կերակուր զսարսափելին վարդապետեաց: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.6.

⁹¹ See John 3:5.

⁹² Եւ գծնունդն հոգեւոր երկանցն, որ ի ջրոյ եւ ի Հոգւոյ, ծանուցեալ թէ, որդիս Աստուծոյ գործէ, ջուր ինչ լուալեաց զնոյն նոցին ուսոյց: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.7. Ջուր լուալեաց refers to the dirty, excess water left over after someone has bathed. See NBHL, “Ջուր լուալեաց” s.v. լուալիք.

⁹³ Եւ զաւրհնաբանեալ զաւր կիւրակէին, յորում արար զլոյսն առաջին եւ կատարեաց զլոյսն յարութեան իւրոյ ի նմին, եւ զլոյսն կենարար գալստեանն նովաւ տնաւրինեաց, զայն պատկեր պաշտելի առուր ընդ այլոցն զուգաթուեալ նոցին թարգմանեաց: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.8.

⁹⁴ Արդ, զո՞րս յայցանէ զնոցա գիտեմք խափանեալս, ոչ առաքելական կամ աստուածականս: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.9.

⁹⁵ Ջծնրաղբութեանն խորհրդական պաղատանս, զոր ինքն Արարիչն ամենայնի խոնարհեալ կրկնեաց: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.10.

⁹⁶ Թէ զաւագանն ուրացեալ ի նոցանէ, յորում ինքն Քրիստոս մկրտեցաւ: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.11.

⁹⁷ Թէ զհաղորդութիւն անմահութեանն զոր ինքն բոլորից Տէրն ճաշակեաց: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.12.

⁹⁸ See Matthew 5:28. Թէ զմծղնէական անխտիր պղծութիւնն, զոր Տէրն զհայեցուածն արգելեալ խտրեաց: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1088.13.

⁹⁹ i.e. the Cross.

¹⁰⁰ Թէ զնշանն երկրպագեալ, զոր Աստուածն մարդացեալ յուսն իւր բարձեալ կրեաց՝ իբր զփառս ինքնեան եւ գիշխանութիւն: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1088.14.

10. [They engage in] man-worshipping apostasy, which is more abominable and accursed than idolatry.¹⁰¹
11. [They have a] self-conferred, contemptible priesthood, which is the likeness of Satan.¹⁰²
12. Their despal of the rite (lit. ‘crown’) of marriage, which the Lord himself along with his mother the Theotokos respected and honored by his miracle.¹⁰³ They despise the rite (lit. ‘crown’) and consider approaching one another in love to be perfect love, from God and pleasing to Christ; saying that “God is love”¹⁰⁴ and desires union through love and not the rite (lit. ‘crown’).¹⁰⁵
13. Their derisive mockery of the first-fruits, which Abel, Noah, Abraham, David, Solomon, and Elijah showed conciliates divine wrath.¹⁰⁶
14. And they dare to name the head of their detestable sect “Christ,” about which Christ previously bore witness: “There will arise false Christs and false prophets,”¹⁰⁷ and this is what the prophet meant by saying, “The fool has thought in his heart that there is no God.”¹⁰⁸

As can be gathered from the above list, “T‘ondrakec ‘i” was understood as a threat levelled at the very heart and center of the institutional Church and its authority as manifested in its institutions and liturgical rites. The Church’s power was due in large part to its claim to be the exclusive intermediary between the people and God. This role was visibly made manifest in a variety of ways, from major rites of passage to the quotidian details of daily life. The liturgical forms of the institutional Church — baptism, divine liturgy (patarag), marriage, burial — were the most ¹⁰¹ Թէ զմարդապաշտ ուրացութիւնն, որ դարչելի է եւ անիծեալ, քան զկուսապաշտութիւն: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1088.15. This could be a reference to the community’s Adoptionist Christology. On this, see Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, 216–230.

¹⁰² Թէ զինքնաձեռն քամահանաց քահանայութիւնն, որ սատանայի է նմանութիւն: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1088.16.

¹⁰³ See John 2:1–11.

¹⁰⁴ 1 John 4:8.

¹⁰⁵ Թէ զպսակին ամուսնութեան անգոսնութիւն, զոր Տէրն ինքեան սքանչելեալք եւ մարբն իւրով Աստուածածնաւ յարգեաց եւ պատուեաց. զպսակն անգոսնեն, եւ զոր սիրով մերձենան յիրեարս կատարեալ սէր համարին եւ յԱստուծոյ եւ հաճոյ Քրիստոսի. թէ «Աստուած սէր է» եւ զսիրով միաւորիլն կամի եւ ոչ զպսակ: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1088.17.

¹⁰⁶ Թէ զերախայրեացն կատակերգական երգիծանութիւնն, զոր Աբէլ եւ Նոյ եւ Աբրահամ եւ Դաւիթ եւ Սողոմոն եւ Եղիայ աստուածային բարկութեանն ցուցին հաշտարարութիւն: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1088.18.

¹⁰⁷ Matthew 24:24.

¹⁰⁸ Psalm 13(14):1. Թէ որ զգլխաւոր աղանդին իւրեանց դարչութեանն յանդգնեալ Քրիստոս անուանեն, զոր Քրիստոս կանխաւ վկայեաց. թէ՛ «յարիցեն սուտ Քրիստոսք եւ սուտ մարգարէք», եւ այս է ասելն մարգարէին, թէ՛ «Խորհեցաւ անզգամն ի սրտի իւրում թէ ոչ իցէ Աստուած»: Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1088.19.

prominent manifestations of the role and means by which the Church acted out its function as mediator between the human and divine realms. The T'ondrakian community viewed it as unnecessary to perform these rites in the way instituted by the establishment Church and thus threatened its authority. One may profitably compare the situation here with the iconoclast controversy of an earlier period. Recent scholarship on Byzantine iconoclasm has uncovered the extent to which the clerical reaction against icons was due to their fear of it compromising their position as sole mediators between divinity and humanity and their general suspicion and hostility towards any other source of spiritual authority or power.¹⁰⁹

The physical spaces and elements that were the visible loci of the Church's authority and mediating role were also under threat. The cross was both the quintessential symbol of the Church (comparable to the flag of a modern nation), as well as understood to be a sacred medium of divine power and presence in the hand of the cleric, particularly when sanctified by the miwron. Historians of the period, such as T'ovma Arcruni and Aristakēs Lastivertc'i, relate episodes wherein crosses were stolen or intentionally destroyed.¹¹⁰ Thus, the T'ondrakite rejection of cross veneration was not just a matter of intellectual theological dispute, but was a highly charged matter with very practical consequences, as a result of such instances and its symbolic manifestation of church authority. Likewise, the church building, with relics of saints under the sanctified altar or in other significant places, was the physical meeting place between divine and human realms, a locus of the holy. Great pains were taken in the period to construct churches as beautiful and luxurious as possible to suit this lofty function, the church of the Holy ¹⁰⁹ See Brubaker, Inventing Byzantine Iconoclasm, 35, 49.

¹¹⁰ See T'ovma Arcruni, History of the House of the Arcrunik' III.27, MH 11:249–50, tr. Thomson, 306–08; Aristakēs Lastivertc'i, History 23, MH 16:615–622. For other instances, see Garsoĭan, Paulician Heresy, 165–66.

Cross at Alt‘amar, considered in the previous chapter, being one of the most extreme examples of visual ostentation. The T‘ondrakites’ approach to such matters was essentially iconoclastic, summed up well in one purported report Grigor Magistros provides of their views: “We are not worshippers of matter but worshippers of God; and we consider the cross, church, priestly garments, and performance of the sacrifice as nothing, looking only to their inner sense [or mystery: խորհուրդ].”¹¹¹ The T‘ondrakites rejected the notion that the church was primarily to be understood as the church building, believing it referred instead to the assembled believers. This is one of the principal points that Anania takes up in the fragment surviving from his Refutation, wherein he unifies the different senses of the word “church,” as (a) pertaining to the assembly of believers who have come together;¹¹² (b) universal and catholic, spreading out through the entire inhabited world, unified and uniform;¹¹³ (c) and as a sacred building that serves as the home of the Lord and a lordly temple.¹¹⁴ Anania argues that these senses are not in opposition to one another, but in harmony together. His Encomium on the Holy Universal Church, much of it written in the second person addressed to the church, also praises the church according to these various senses. The anti-iconoclastic project is continued further by Grigor in the several discourses of his Book of Lamentation devoted to celebrating the church (75) and its ritual objects such as the semantron (92) and miwron (93).

¹¹¹ Մեք ոչ եմք նիւթապաշտք, այլ աստուածապաշտք, եւ զիսաչ եւ զեկեղեցի եւ զզգեստ քահանայի եւ զպատարագագործութիւն՝ զայսոսիկ ոչինչ համարիմք, այլ զխորհուրդ նոցա: Grigor Magistros, Letters-II no. 4 [67], MH 16:199.59. On the iconoclasm of the Paulicians/T‘ondrakites and their identification with Manichaeism for that reason, see Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, 201–204.

¹¹² Եկաւորական գումարութեամբ եկեալ ի մի հաւաքումն եւ անունադրեալ ըստ ժողովման՝ եկեղեցի: Anania of Narek, Refutation of the T‘ondrakians, MH 10:436.3.

¹¹³ Կոչի կաթողիկէ, այսինքն բոլորակ, որ բնաւ ընդհանուր ընդ ամենայն տիեզերս, միապէս, միատեսակ, մի կաթողիկէ եկեղեցի կոչի: Anania of Narek, Refutation of the T‘ondrakians, MH 10:436.6.

¹¹⁴ Այլ եւ տուն եւ տաճար եւ եկեղեցի ասի...տուն Տեառն եւ տաճար տէրունական եւ եկեղեցի Քրիստոսի: Anania of Narek, Refutation of the T‘ondrakians, MH 10:437.16.

The liturgical calendar of feasts and fasts was a prominent way by which the authority of the church permeated the daily life of the people, since time itself and the quotidian habits of eating and drinking were regulated by the liturgical calendar. The Tʻondrakian community did not attribute the same status of sacredness to Sunday that the institutional Church did, much less follow its calendar of prescribed feasts and fasts. Ordination, which was strictly regulated, granted the rite to perform liturgical functions and was the entryway into the highly articulated and stratified ecclesiastical hierarchy, from parish functionaries (dpir, sarkavag, etc.) at the bottom to the catholicos at the top. All the above were rejected by the Tʻondrakians, who instead sanctified their own priests and had a much less developed hierarchical structure. Taken together, all of the above makes it clear that the Tʻondrakites were viewed by Church hierarchs first and foremost as a menacing threat to the legitimacy of the establishment Church's power and authority, as manifested in its liturgical and ecclesial orders and institutions.

The Application of the “Tʻondrakecʻi” Label to Ascetic Figures

It is thus that the label “Tʻondrakecʻi” could be extended to anyone that threatened the authority of the Church and its role as exclusive mediator between the divine and human realms, enacted via its many visible institutions, such as the regimented ordination and stratified hierarchy and its liturgical rites, ceremonies, and sacraments. And with the awareness of the tenth-century crises examined above in the background, it becomes readily understandable how at this particular time the integrity of the Church, the stability of the social order, and the authority of the catholicos were perceived as being threatened seemingly on all fronts. It is under such conditions that the label “Tʻondrakecʻi” came to be applied to figures within the church (rather than the Tʻondrakian community itself which existed outside it) that the hierarchy viewed as a threat to its authority or as competing sources of spiritual authority and power. Chief among such culprits were reformist, spiritualist, ascetic figures, whether they be bishops, vardapet abbots, or monastics (all of whom are represented in contemporaneous sources that censure “Tondrahec ‘i” activity). The episcopal hierarchy and especially the catholicos viewed such figures as diminishing the importance of the liturgy and sacraments, which were the visible and physical manifestation of the Church’s mediating role and external sign of their authority in a domain, and advocating instead another way to access God, focused on the interior, unseen, non-material, private plane.

One may see this illustrated through the case of Yakobos, bishop of Hark‘, as portrayed in the History of Aristakēs Lastivertc‘i. From Aristakēs’ first introduction of him, his asceticism is noted, as well as the fact that he encouraged such behavior in those priests under him:

At the beginning of his term of authority, he exemplified all the virtues. He dressed in sack-cloth, fasted, went bare-footed; and he chose for his priests who always accompanied him, men coarsely clad and simple, who avoided a life of pleasure, and constantly occupied themselves in the singing of psalms.¹¹⁵

Yakobos emerges as a reforming figure, who, like Xosrov of Anjewac‘i, believed that the delicate balance between spirit and body, inner reality and external manifestation, was off balance, with the latter being emphasized at the expense of the former. In the views of such spiritually-minded bishops, too much emphasis was being put on external forms to the neglect of the individual heart and spirit. For this reason, Yakobos introduced reforms in order to seek to correct this situation: “In the first place he began by establishing selection among priests

¹¹⁵ Սա ի սկզբան իւրոյ իշխանութեանն առաքինական կերպարանս յանձին ցուցանէր՝ քրձագգած, պահացաւղ, բոկագանաց: Եւ ընտրեաց իւր քահանայս, որ յար ընդ ինքեան շրջին, խոշորագգեստս եւ անպաճոյս, հատեալս ի հեշտալի կերակրոց. եւ միշտ սաղմոսական երգոցն պարապէին: Aristakēs Lastivertc‘i, History 22, MH 16:610.2; trans. Conybeare, Key of Truth, 131–32.

according to worth and told the unworthy to remain silent.”¹¹⁶ This seems to indicate that Yakobos began to introduce some kind of hierarchy among ordained priests in his jurisdiction based not on their seniority or familial connections, but on their spiritual merit. This would have meant a disruption to the ecclesiastical and societal norm, and would have been perceived as bringing disorder during an era that, as we have seen, was already very dynamic and unstable. As the leader of a highly conservative institution, the catholicos would have viewed any innovation as potentially dangerous. Furthermore, Aristakēs claims that Yakobos ordered priests “to offer the sacrifice (պատարագ) only three times per year.”¹¹⁷ This seems to have applied to the monastic communities under his jurisdiction, which would have contained many ordained priests. This injunction would likely have been an attempt to downplay the external ritual, which in his view had been overly emphasized at the expense of the inner, spiritual dimension of faith. Bishop Yakobos also taught that the institution of confession and forgiveness does not in and of itself cleanse an individual of sin. Rather, an individual is only forgiven by God if he “in his own soul himself repented of his sins;” and unless he did that “commemorations help him not, nor liturgies (պատարագք).”¹¹⁸ By the same reasoning, and like the T’ondrakians, he scorned the practice of offering matal to atone for the sins of the departed, arguing that it did not help the soul that had not repented.¹¹⁹ At issue was the tension between ritual cleansing vs. moral repentance. Bishop Yakobos inclined to the view that in his time the former was being emphasized at the expense of the latter and sought to correct the balance with reforms, some of ¹¹⁹ Aristakēs Lastiverc’i, History 22, MH 16:613.23.

¹¹⁶ Ջառաջինն՝ ընտրութիւն սկսաւ առնել ի մէջ քահանայից ըստ արժանաւորութեան, եւ անարժանիցն ասաց լռել: Aristakēs Lastiverc’i, History 22, MH 16:612.21; trans. Conybeare, Key of Truth, 133.

¹¹⁷ Ի տարւոջն երիս միայն մատուցանել պատարագս: Aristakēs Lastiverc’i, History 22, MH 16:613.21.

¹¹⁸ Այլ այսպէս ուսուցանէր, թէ որ ինքն իւրով անձամբն, որով մեղաւն եւ նովիմբ չապաշխարեաց, նմա ոչ յիշատակք աւգնեն եւ ոչ պատարագք: Aristakēs Lastiverc’i, History 22, MH 16:613.23; trans. Conybeare, Key of Truth, 134.

which (like offering mass only three times per year) would have been perceived as rather extreme. One may easily see how from the establishment Church’s perspective, the reforms and behavior of a bishop like Yakobos would be perceived as a direct threat to the stability of the social and ecclesiastical order and its own role as exclusive mediator between the individual and God, enacted through its liturgical rites.

The stark language Aristakēs uses to describe the threat of Yakobos and his teaching reveals the degree to which it was seen as threatening the integrity of the Church. Aristakēs says that Yakobos planned “to subvert the holy church from its foundations” and “shear off the glory of the church.”¹²⁰ As Aristakēs goes on to narrate, Bishop Yakobos’ actions resulted in the most undesirable outcomes for the establishment Church, intermeshed as it was with the political and societal order: social unrest, division, and schism. As a result of Bishop Yakobos’ activities, “the congregations were divided into two parties, because some accepted this teaching, but others not. And all were disturbed and perplexed.”¹²¹ Responding to the situation, a synod was called and Yakobos was summoned, but the governors of the province would not hand him over, according to Aristakēs because they respected his sanctity. Bishop Yakobos, however, was betrayed by a close associate named Esayi, and turned over to Catholicos Sargis (sed. 992/3–1019), who defrocked him and administered to him the common punishment reserved for heretics: “He branded his forehead with the likeness of a fox” and imprisoned him.¹²² While in Aristakēs’ portrayal, Bishop Yakobos is called a Tʿondrakian,¹²³ he refers to him by this epithet for the reason mentioned above — that he threatened the integrity of the Church in a way typologically similar to that of the actual Tʿondrakians. We can be sure that he was not actually a member of the Tʿondrakite community firstly by the fact that he was a bishop of the establishment Church and secondly by the fact that Aristakēs reports that after he managed to escape from prison he tried to join the sect of the Tʿondrakians, after having been excommunicated from the Church.¹²⁴ The third indication is that he was excommunicated. Excommunication (anathematization) was the ultimate punishment for elements overly threatening to Church order and authority, and there are several such instances in our period, from bishops such as Xosrov and Yakobos to laypeople such as the bandits in Siwnikʿ.

¹²⁰ Կարծէր այնու հիմամբ տապալել զեկեղեցի սուրբ...Կարծէր սափրել զփառս եկեղեցոյ: Aristakēs Lastivertc’i, History 22, MH 16:612.17, 19; trans. Conybeare, Key of Truth, 133.

¹²¹ Եւ առ այս յերկուս բաժանեցան ժողովուրդք, յոմանց ընկալեալ եղև այս, եւ յոմանց ոչ. եւ իբրև ամենայն մարդ ի ծուփս եւ ի տարակուսանս անկեալ կայր: Aristakēs Lastivertc’i, History 22, MH 16:613.24; trans. Conybeare, Key of Truth, 134.

¹²² Եւ աղուեսադրոջմ կերպարանաւք իսարան յերեսս նորա եղեալ: Aristakēs Lastivertc’i, History 22, MH 16:614.30; trans. Conybeare, Key of Truth, 135. This punishment was inflicted on heretical leaders in order to mark them as bestial and sub-human. On this punishment, see the nineteenth canon of the Council of Šahapivan. See Hovhannessian, “Canons of the Council of Šahapivan,” 92; Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, 82–83.

Anania of Narek and the Tʿondrakecʿi label

On first impression and based on the testimonia about Anania and his Refutation from Grigor of Narek, one might assume that Anania of Narek wrote his Refutation of the Tʿondrakians on his own initiative in order to “demolish” the heresy. However, the facts on the ground were surely more subtle than that. One recalls that the work was commissioned by Catholicos Anania Mokacʿi, as Grigor Magistros had noted. This chapter has shown how the catholicate of Anania Mokacʿi was fraught with controversy. In the midst of crisis and chaos, ¹²³ Aristakēs Lastivertcʿi, History 22, MH 16:614.30.

¹²⁴ Aristakēs says that even they refused to take him. This is a trope (topos) about heretics meant to further denigrate them (i.e., it probably did not happen). Aristakēs also relates that he fled first to Constantinople and sought baptism from the Chalcedonian Byzantines, but they refused to admit him (in other cases, such condemned figures are mentioned as rushing off to become muslim). In all likelihood, Yakobos went neither to the Tʿondrakians nor to the Chalcedonians, but after being defrocked went straight to his family in Xlatʿ (and then apparently later to Muharkin), where he resided until his death in ignominy, as Aristakēs goes on to say. See Aristakēs Lastivertcʿi, History 22, MH 16:614–15.32–36.

Catholicos Anania's agenda was to promote uniformity, demand obedience to the hierarchical order, and suppress subversive elements. It seems more likely that Catholicos Anania had Anania of Narek write the Refutation as a test of loyalty, because Narek monastery itself under Abbot Anania had emerged as a "Tondrakec 'i'" menace (i.e., was viewed as threatening the primacy of the Church's role as sole mediator manifested in the external forms of its liturgy, hierarchical order, and institutions). Under Abbot Anania's leadership, Narek monastery with its vibrant spirituality and advanced ascetic-mystical practices (see Chapter Three) laid greater emphasis on the inner dimensions of Christian practice than on external forms. As such, it would have been a prime suspect in the eyes of the episcopal hierarchy, attuned as it was to any element that threatened its authority and the necessity of its mediating role. It is important also to recall here the differences between bishops and vardapets in this period, whose roles were completely different and unconnected with one another, unlike the contemporary situation in the church today. Bishops, unlike vardapets (ordained teachers of Theology) such as Anania, did not often receive advanced theological training. Their qualification to the largely administrative post of bishop generally had to do with their familial connections, rather than with their spiritual or theological qualifications. Those pursuing theology and advanced spirituality sought training in monastic academies and passed through the systematic training required to become a vardapet. Unlike the contemporary situation in the Armenian church, there was no overlap between vardapets and the episcopal hierarchy. Rather, the two represented different, and at times in this period, clashing forms of religious authority. The former relied primarily on spiritual, charismatic, theological authority, inasmuch as the vardapet's function was to teaching and preach, while the latter primarily wielded administrative, hierarchical, liturgical authority. The rise to prominence of the cenobitic institutions in this period meant an elevation of the social position and authority of the vardapet abbot, particularly when like Anania of Narek, that figure was the head of a monastic academy with many monks under their authority. Reading between the lines, some contemporary scholars have made the apt suggestion that it is probably more appropriate to think of Anania's Refutation as having been compelled by Catholicos Anania rather than simply commissioned.¹²⁵

This view is lent further credence when one examines the extant portion of Anania's treatise. Although it is only a small fragment and therefore one must be cautious about drawing any implications or conclusions about the rest of the work, what immediately strikes the reader is how far removed the piece is from any trace of the typical invective or vociferous attacks that one normally finds in polemical works directed against heretics or heresies. By contrast, the fragment of the work that survives is a profound and subtle theological, philosophical, and etymological reflection on the meaning of the church (եկեղեցի) that is consonant with the mystical approach to theology exemplified in the discourses of Grigor's Matean. As Mahé observed, at one point it crescendos into panegyric-like praise of the church.¹²⁶ From the short fragment, one forms the impression that Anania was not only defending the Church from the critiques levelled against it by the actual T'ondrakians, but that he was also defending himself from "T'ondrakec 'i" suspicion, via a textual performance in which he demonstrated his own loyalty by showing the depth of his understanding and appreciation for the church. One recalls as well his one extant panegyric, which is a lengthy encomium in praise of the (Armenian) Church, which elaborates these themes even further. The greater part of the work is written in the second person, addressed to the church itself, as Anania praises and offers mystical reflection on the many dimensions of the church.¹²⁷ As such, the encomium prefigures the literary approach of Grigor Narekac‘i, as Hrachya T‘amrazyan has observed.¹²⁸ In addition to Grigor’s festal works (տաղթ, դանձք), one recalls specifically Grigor’s approach in the several discourses of the Matean that are devoted to celebrating aspects of the Church, its faith and ritual elements, in particular the thirty-fourth, which is a lengthy confession of faith, the fifty-third, on the eucharist, the seventy-fifth, which eulogizes the spiritual and physical nature of the church, the ninety-second, devoted to the “wooden bell” or semantron, and the ninety-third, on the miwron. Weighing heavily in the contextual backdrop of all these texts is not just the Narekian writers’ response to the iconoclastic views of the T‘ondrakians, but their own attempt to exonerate themselves of “T‘ondrakec‘i” suspicion by demonstrating that their highly internal approach to spirituality is not set in opposition to external liturgical forms and thus should not be viewed as a threat to the episcopal hierarchy.

¹²⁵ Cowe, "Generic and Methodological Developments," 679–80; Terian, "Gregory of Narek," 285.

¹²⁶ Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 55.

There were indeed ways in which Anania’s teaching could be identified with extremist positions of the time, like that of Bishop Yakobos. Reminiscent of the latter’s policies, the central argument of Anania’s “To Priests” is that the chief qualification or prerequisite of being a good priest is not first and foremost to be an adept performer of ritual or a loyal member to the hierarchy, but to be one who has attained inward and outward virtue. Thus, the treatise begins: “Now, the priestly rank itself is manifest in worthiness, how one must be holy and immaculate, removed from all evil things. For God demands of a priest the perfection [or: performance] of every virtue.”¹²⁹ Anania says in many different ways and by referring to numerous biblical examples that only the priest that is holy and perfected in virtue is worthy to approach God in the eucharistic liturgy. Otherwise, an unworthy priest communicates in the divine mystery to his peril. It is therefore the inner purity of the priest that makes him worthy of performing the mystery; it is not enough merely to be ordained and consecrated by the miwron without having attained inner sanctity as well.

¹²⁷ Anania of Narek, Encomium on the Holy Universal Church, MH 10:628–46.77–221.

¹²⁸ T‘amrazyan, Grigor Narekats‘in ev Narekian dprots‘e, 2:295.

¹²⁹ Արդ, քահանայական աստիճան ինքն յայտնի է արժանաւորութեան, թէ որպէս պարտ է լինել սուրբ եւ անարատ, հեռացեալ յամենայն իրաց չարեաց, եւ զի զկատարումն ամենայն առաքինութեան պահանջէ Աստուած ի քահանայէն: Anania of Narek, “To Priests,” MH 10:328.1.

Likewise, Anania's ethical instruction is marked by a distinction between external and internal behavior, with greater stress laid upon the latter in both the development of virtue and as the marker of true goodness. Anania uses two closely related terms to distinguish between the two domains: ereveli vark ('երեւելի վարք') refers to 'outward conduct' or 'visible behavior' while anerevoyt bark ('աներեւոյթ բարք') refers to 'internal disposition' or 'invisible behavior.' He clarifies this distinction in the following passage from the instruction "To Priests:"

And just as you direct your outward conduct [գերեւելի վարսդ], i.e. with fasting, prayer, labors, and poverty, so also direct your inward disposition [զաներեւոյթ բարս], i.e. be gentle, humble, pleasant, merciful, without rancor, patient, peace-making, forbearing, because one must in every way be pleasing to God, be cleansed of outward faults as well as inward, spiritual vices, since the Pharisee and the foolish virgins rightly directed only their outward way of life and were found unworthy.¹³⁰

What is implied in the latter half of the quote in the reference to the Pharisee and foolish virgins is that properly ordering the external is not sufficient for ensuring acceptability to God. Since this is an instruction to priests, the implication in the liturgical realm is that properly executing the external form (liturgical ritual) should not be the only or primary preoccupation of the priest. Rather, they should be more focused on their inward purity, their ascetic and ethical behavior.

¹³⁰ Եւ որպէս գերեւելի վարսդ ուղղես՝ զպահս եւ զաղաւթս, զաշխատութիւնս եւ զանրնչութիւնս, այսպէս եւ զաներեւոյթ բարս ուղղես՝ հեզ, խոնարհ, քաղցր, ողորմած, անոխակալ, համբերող, խաղաղարար, երկայնամիտ, քանզի պարտ է ամենայնիւ հաճոյ լինել Աստուծոյ, յերեւելի սխալանաց մաքրիլ եւ յաներեւոյթ՝ ի շնչական ախտից, քանզի փարիսեցիւն եւ յիմար կուսանքն գերեւելիս միայն ուղղեցին զվարսն եւ խոտան գտան: Anania of Narek, "To Priests," MH 10:328.30. He elaborates on this also in "Evangelical, Apostolic, and Prophetic Speech," MH 10:403.

Such a view of course could be threatening to the hierarchy because its power was manifest in the external forms of rituals and it is by means of the faithful execution of rituals on the part of the priests that their role as mediator between the divine and human realms is expressed and enacted. From the perspective of the catholicos, this could well be viewed as a challenge to the power of the Church, which perhaps prized loyalty and faithful execution of liturgical form as highly as personal behavior. Reform and innovation of any kind are generally met with suspicion and hostility on the part of leaders of conservative institutions. Such concerns would be all the more salient in a period marked by chaos and disorder, when the Church already felt under threat by an internal community like the Tʿondrakians and an external church like the Byzantines, both of whom openly rejected and denounced their liturgical forms and rituals.

Approaching the issue from this nuanced contextual backdrop, it becomes understandable why Anania in particular, and the abbots of the new monasteries in general, could be seen as posing a threat to, or perceived as competing with, the episcopal hierarchy in a way typologically similar to the Tʿondrakites. The explosion in monastic construction, the greater social and economic visibility of monasteries, and the greater number of monks under the leadership of the vardapet abbots, gave those figures an increased measure of spiritual authority and clout. The spiritual counsel they offered and the private prayer and devotions they emphasized could easily be seen as competing with the external liturgical forms the episcopal hierarchy relied on, by offering an alternate, higher, independent path to union with the divine. Anania's own texts bear witness to the fact that he laid more emphasis on the inner, spiritual dimensions of prayer and piety than the external performance of liturgical services. For example, in "On Compunction and Tears," he counsels his addressee:

Obtain a pure heart and a humble spirit, so that God will incline to your prayers and smell the sweet aroma. As it is written, “When Noah offered the sacrifice (պատարագ) to God, it was smelled by the Lord as a sweet aroma” — not, that is, the body or the blood of the birds and beasts, but the will of the one who offered. Likewise, your prayers are a sacrifice (պատարագ) to God; offer them before God with purity of heart.¹³¹

Here, Anania uses the word “sacrifice (պատարագ),” to refer not to the eucharist or mass (its common designation in Armenian), but to the private, contemplative prayer of the monk, offered in secret. In “Counsel on Prayer,” he instructed that one should never neglect the communal prayers, and that one should perform without deviation one’s privately determined rule of prayer, fasts, and abstentions.¹³² In the monastic setting, it was the latter that was given extra emphasis over the former. For example, an anonymous text “On Faith (Յաղագս Հաւատոյ),” from a fourteenth-century monastic miscellany that also contains the only known copy of Anania’s “Recapitulated and Condensed Sentences,” states explicitly that “the honor and glory of communal prayer is single, while that of individual prayer is twofold.”¹³³ Likewise, at Narek, the private prayer of the monk was given special emphasis. One recalls that Grigor’s Matean itself was composed in the first place to be employed in the private prayer, and in conjunction with the spiritual exercises of monks.¹³⁴ It is easy to see how, given the various social and ecclesiastical

¹³¹ Սիրտ սուրբ ստացիր եւ հոգի խոնարհ, որ քո յաղաւթսն խոնարհի Աստուած եւ հոտոտի ի հոտ անուշից: Որպէս եւ գրեալ է, թէ «Յորժամ մատոյց Նոյ պատարագ Աստուծոյ, հոտոտեցաւ ի Տէր ի հոտ անուշից», ոչ թէ ի մարմին եւ յարիւն թռչնոցն եւ անասնոցն, այլ ի կամս մատուցանողին: Այսպէս եւ քո աղաւթքն պատարագ է Աստուծոյ, սրբութեամբ սրտիւ մատո գնա առաջի Աստուծոյ: Anania of Narek, “On Compunction and Tears,” MH 10:368–69.59–61.

¹³² Զկարգեալ աղաւթսն հասարակաց՝ գտուընջեան եւ զգիշերոյ, բնաւ մի՛ անտես առներ: Զքո սահմանեալ առանձնական կարգն անխափան կատարեա զաղաւթից եւ զպահոց, եւ զկարգեալ պահսն սրբութեամբ պահեա, զամենայն զգայարանսն զգուշութեամբ պահեա, մանաւանդ աչս եւ զականջս եւ զշաւչափելիս: Anania of Narek, “Words for Prayer,” MH 10:347.1–2.

¹³³ Հասարակ աղաւթքն է միակի պատիւ եւ փառք. իսկ առանձնականն՝ կրկնի: From “On Faith (Յաղագս Հաւատոյ),” M 2680 ff. 350r–361r. Cited in T’amrazyan, Anania Narekats’i, 254 n. 122. See also Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 60–61.

¹³⁴ I have considered this use of Grigor’s prayer book in Arlen, “Texts for Keeping Watch,” 16–19.

crises that led to what Jean-Pierre Mahé has called the “antiheretical psychosis” that marked the middle to late tenth century,¹³⁵ such a perspective would be viewed with hostility.¹³⁶

One can appreciate further the concerns of Catholicos Anania Mokac‘i when we consider the fact that certain monastic communities of the period were known or supposed to have had direct associations with T‘ondrakites. An example of the former is the monastery of Kčaw in Mokka, to which Grigor of Narek addressed his letter of reproof, noting that the abbot had reported to a vardapet named Mušel that he (the abbot) had sent a messenger to the T‘ondrakites and had been convinced that “they are not alien to the apostolic tradition (չեն նոքա ակտար յառաքելականդ դաւանութենէ)”.¹³⁷

Another episode related by Aristakēs Lastiverc‘i is suggestive in regard to the way that ascetic activity came to be associated with the T‘ondrakec‘i label.¹³⁸ The reported event took place in the district of Mananałi, a region associated with the Arab emirates and not far from the border with the Byzantine empire. As with the episode of bishop Yakobos, the narration begins with ascetic activity. This time the figure in question was a monk named Kuncik, who lived in the area around the city of Širni. Kuncik was a highly respected and influential spiritual leader to certain noble men and women of the area, including one Hranoyš and her two kinsfolk, Axni and Kamaray, who held domains in the area, and a prince (išxan) named Vrvēr. Working together, they influenced many of the local people and transformed the places of worship in accordance with “T‘ondrakec‘i” ways, including the monastery that Vrvēr himself had financed and supported on his private domain and churches in the villages of Kašē and Ałiwsoy. Aristakēs

¹³⁵ “psychose antihérétique regnant à cette époque.” Mahé, “L’Église arménienne,” 521. One might compare this to McCarthyism (Red Scare) of the last century or the “cancel culture” of the present.

¹³⁶ This point was made in Cowe, “Generic and Methodological Developments,” 679–80.

¹³⁷ Grigor of Narek, “Letter to Kčaw Monastery,” MH 12:1087.1.

¹³⁸ The episode is narrated in Aristakēs Lastiverc‘i, History 23.

notes with horror that “whenever an opportunity presented itself...they shamelessly tore down the symbol of our salvation and the armor of our Lord’s victory”¹³⁹ and then relates an example of one such episode. As mentioned above, the Tʿondrakians viewed the reverence paid to physical crosses as idolatrous matter-worship. As also mentioned above, there are examples in the period of iconoclastic destruction, as well as theft, of crosses used in the liturgical services of the church as well as xačʿkʿars (carved stone crosses erected to commemorate the death of a loved one or on other occasions). Probably in an attempt to emphasize the spiritual, inward dimensions of faith and downplay external objects and forms, those in Vrvēr’s domains removed some of the costly and prized ritual objects and crosses employed in worship. In response to such “Tʿondrakecʿi” activity, the region’s archbishop, Samuēl, gathered an armed force and had the perpetrators seized, in particular six of the principal leaders (called vardapets by Aristakēs), who were branded with the sign of a fox.

Here then is another vivid example of the way in which ascetic and spiritual monks were under great suspicion and at times violently persecuted by the episcopal hierarchy. Despite his earlier Refutation, Anania could not escape the “anti-heretical psychosis” of the age. During the tenure of the next catholicos after Anania Mokacʿi, Xaçʿik Aršaruni, Anania was charged with the “Tʿondrakecʿi” label. Xaçʿik demanded from him a profession of his orthodox belief, despite the fact that Anania had written two previous works at Xaçʿik’s request, the Book of Instruction, while Xaçʿik was bishop of Aršarunikʿ and the Root of Faith, while Xaçʿik was catholicos.¹⁴⁰

These details show just how fraught with tension the relations between the episcopal hierarchy

¹³⁹ Ո՛ւր եւ դիպաւդ ժամ հանդիպէր նոցա, գիրկութեան մերոյ գնչանն եւ գտէրունական յաղթութեան գգչնն...[սորտակէին անամաւթաբար: Aristakēs Lastivercʿi, History 23, MH 16:617–618.15, trans. Conybeare, Key of Truth, 137.

¹⁴⁰ Tʿamrazyan, Grigor Narekatsʿin ev Narekyan dprotsʿ 2:144–45.

and the leaders of the new cenobitic monasteries were. Evidently, the accusation came at the end of Anania's life (ի ժամ վախճանի իմոյ)¹⁴¹ and was apparently the result of Catholicos Xaç'ik listening to the accusations of others against Anania (ընդունակ խնդուլթեամբ բանսարկու բանից...եղեր լսող).¹⁴² Abbot Anania was apparently deposed from his position as abbot of Narek, and he accused the catholicos of relishing his exile (ախորժելով զիմս տարագրուլթիւն).¹⁴³ According to the memory of a local tradition preserved in a letter by Yakob Patkanc', when he was deposed from Narek Anania took refuge at Kčaw monastery in Mokk' (the same monastery to which Grigor wrote his letter against the T'ondrakites).¹⁴⁴ Likely from exile, Anania wrote the "Letter of Confession" in order to establish the veracity of his word (իմոց բանից ճշմարտութիւն) and the trustworthiness of his faith (զհաւատիս հաւատոց իմոց).¹⁴⁵ In this work, he was obliged to denounce and anathematize "all heretics, the first, the middle, and the last (նզովեմ զամենայն հերձուածողսն, զառաջինս եւ զմիջինս, եւ զվերջինս)"¹⁴⁶ and especially those of his time, the T'ondrakites.¹⁴⁷ He then confessed his loyalty

¹⁴¹ Anania of Narek, "Letter of Confession," MH 10:649.3.

¹⁴² Anania of Narek, "Letter of Confession," MH 10:649.4.

¹⁴³ Anania of Narek, "Letter of Confession," MH 10:649.4.

¹⁴⁴ Yakob refers to the monastery as the "alleged site of Lord Anania's resignation/dismissal (հրաժարման տեղի վարկանի տեառն Անանիայի)."¹⁴⁴ The letter is a report of the research of Yakob Patkanc' in Mokk'. Yakob was a monk of Ktuc' Anapat and was sent by his abbot Karapet vardapet to seek out a rare copy of Grigor's Matean that was preserved there and which, according to local tradition, was an original copy written by Grigor himself. Yakob copied it and it became the base for the 1774 edition of Grigor's book of prayers. This letter is preserved in at least four sources: the manuscript M 950 (ff. 44r–45v, copied in 1834 in Constantinople by a priest named Eliazar — the principal work in the manuscript being an encomium to Varag composed in 1766 by Yovhannēs Mokac' i at the request of the archbishop Grigor); the manuscript M 5037 (a miscellany (ժողովածոյ) copied in 1797 in Constantinople by the notary (նոտար) Matt'ēos); the manuscript M 5066 (a miscellany copied and illustrated in Constantinople from 1808–1815 by Yakob Patkanc'); the printed edition of Grigor of Narek's Matean (Գիրք աղօթից) in Constantinople in 1807 (pages 498–500). For an evaluation of this source, see T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats', 43–47; Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 55–56, 99 n. 379.

¹⁴⁵ Anania of Narek, "Letter of Confession," MH 10:649.1.

¹⁴⁶ Anania of Narek, "Letter of Confession," MH 10:650.9.

¹⁴⁷ Եւ որք ի մերում ժամանակիս, որք թոնդրակեցիք կոչին, նզովեալ եղիցին յԱստուծոյ եւ յամենայն սրբոց Աստուծոյ: Anania of Narek, "Letter of Confession," MH 10:650.10.

to the doctrine established by the prophets, apostles, and early church councils¹⁴⁸ and compiled a lengthy credal confession of faith that is explicitly aligned with official church dogma.¹⁴⁹ He calls himself a “child and inheritor of this faith from birth to old age,”¹⁵⁰ putting his trust in the divine to vindicate him.¹⁵¹ We do not know the outcome of the story — whether he was reinstated at Narek or died in ignominious exile, like Xosrov Anjewac‘i.

The foregoing discussion has elaborated the connection between ascetic, spiritualist figures and the “T‘ondrakec‘i” label. Monastic spirituality laid emphasis on the inner nature of the individual’s journey to God (theōsis) as being of greater importance than the performance of external, liturgical rituals. While monastics like Anania and Grigor were not openly iconoclastic or opposed to the Church establishment, their interior mysticism was viewed as threatening to the catholicos and episcopal hierarchy, who perceived it as diminishing their own, as well as the Church’s role, as the sole mediator between humans and the divine, especially in light of the social and ecclesiastical crises that marked the period. This is the reason their spiritual activity at Narek came under suspicion and attack and why they were forced to defend themselves and their devotion to the church in some of their works.

¹⁴⁸ Anania of Narek, “Letter of Confession,” MH 10:650–51.11–28.

¹⁴⁹ Anania of Narek, “Letter of Confession,” MH 10:652–55.35–73.

¹⁵⁰ Եւ այս հաւատոյ եմ որդի եւ ժառանգ ի ծննդենէ մինչեւ ի ծերութիւն: Anania of Narek, “Letter of Confession,” MH 10:655.74.

¹⁵¹ Anania of Narek, “Letter of Confession,” MH 10:657.90–92.

CHAPTER 5

ANANIA OF NAREK AND ARMENIAN RESPONSES TO BYZANTINE EXPANSION

Արդ, զընտրեալ յԱստուծոյ զՀայաստանեացս ո՞վ իշխէ արհամարհել. ո՞չ ապաքէն հակառակ գտանի այնպիսին Հոգւոյն Սրբոյ, որ ընտրեաց զմեզ ողորմութեամբն իւրով եւ շնորհիւ:

Now then, who would dare to condemn us Armenians, who have been chosen by God? Would not such a person be found to be an adversary of the Holy Spirit, Who chose us by His mercy and grace?

— Anania of Narek, Root of Faith

As discussed in the first chapter, the period from the middle of the ninth to the middle of the eleventh century is marked by a resurgence of the Byzantine Empire, which gradually expanded southwards into Cilicia, northern Syria, and Mesopotamia, and eastwards into Lesser and Greater Armenia. From the perspective of Armenia, the Byzantine expansion may be roughly divided into two periods.¹ During the first, from the middle of the ninth century through the reign of Romanos II (963), the empire’s campaigns and territorial gains were mostly confined to the borderlands, the emirates, and the areas of western or Lesser Armenia. The second period was marked by the absorption of many of the Armenian kingdoms and principalities into the Byzantine Empire, beginning with the Bagratid principality of Tarōn in 966/7 and culminating with the Bagratid kingdom of Kars in 1064. This chapter considers the role of Anania of Narek and a cluster of high-ranking vardapets, who, under Catholicos Xac‘ik Aršaruni, were charged with defending the autonomy and integrity of the Armenian Church in the face of the territorial advances of the Byzantine Empire and the assimilationist agenda of its eastern hierarchs.

¹ On these campaigns and this period of expansion, see Shepard, “Equilibrium to Expansion;” Greenwood, “Armenian Neighbours;” Ter-Ghewondyan, Arab Emirates, 109–24; Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, 124–26.

ECCLESIASTICAL DIPLOMACY AS A BRANCH OF BYZANTINE FOREIGN POLICY

After a bleak century and a half for the Byzantine state, which experienced significant territorial losses to the caliphate followed by a fraught period of collective self-reckoning, the psychological depths of which are manifest in the long iconoclast controversy, the prevailing mood in the state became much more optimistic by the middle of the ninth century.² After the “Triumph of Orthodoxy,” the Byzantine Empire, under Michael III (r. 842–867) and Basil I (867–886), began looking eastwards with an eye to winning back territory on the eastern borders of its state.³ Initial Byzantine victories against the Arabs in the 850s must have lent confidence to the emperor and his army.⁴ In 861, the beginning of the crisis at the caliphal capital (discussed in the first chapter), likely provided further impetus for the Byzantine Empire to seek ways to exploit to their advantage the unstable situation in the East. Naturally, Constantinople looked to the Christian peoples of the caliphate to join their co-religionists across the border in the battle against the Muslim enemy. Throughout this period, the patriarch of Constantinople played an important role in advancing this goal of Byzantine foreign policy. Thus, in the early 860s, during his first patriarchal term, Patriarch Photios (sed. 858–867; 877–886) sent John, Archbishop of Nikē (in Thracia), as his emissary on a diplomatic mission to Armenia to convey an appeal for regional Christian unity and harmony. This should be seen not as a pursuit of theological and Christological agreement for its own sake, but as a diplomatic mission serving the interests of imperial foreign policy, which sought to persuade Armenia (and the other Christian peoples of the Caucasus) to join its side in the military operations against the emirs and caliphate.

² On the iconoclast period, see Brubaker and Haldon, Byzantium in the Iconoclast Era; Auzépy, “State of Emergency.”

³ On the reigns of these two emperors, which followed immediately after the resolution of the iconoclast controversy, see Tougher, “After Iconoclasm.”

⁴ Tougher, “After Iconoclasm,” 297.

To discuss matters, a synod convened at Širakawan in 862/3 under the auspices of (then sparapet) Ašot Bagratuni and Catholicos Zak'aria Jagec'i (sed. 855 – 877).⁵ The patriarch of Constantinople was represented by John, Archbishop of Nikē (in Thracia) and also present was the West Syrian archdeacon Nonnus of Nisibis.⁶ That the synod had less to do with theological or Christological discussion and more to do with political matters is indicated by the fact that only one representative was present from the Byzantine side. Had the discussions at the synod been primarily about debating Christological issues, John of Nikē likely would have found himself at a great disadvantage vis-à-vis the Syriac representative Nonnus (not to mention significantly outnumbered by all of the non-Chalcedonians present). Nonnus held something of celebrity status at the time, having engaged in theological and apologetic activities in Armenia since the early ninth century. As a young deacon, he debated Theodore Abū Qurrah at the court of Ašot Bagratuni (775–826), prince of Tarōn, in the year 817, arguing the miaphysite position over and against Theodore's Chalcedonian theology, and, according to later Armenian writers such as Vardan Arewelc'i, winning the debate.⁷ Later, Nonnus was commissioned by prince Ašot's son Bagrat to write a commentary on the Gospel of John.⁸ He composed the work in Arabic and it was subsequently translated into Armenian some thirty years later.⁹ As a result of

⁵ On this synod and its significance, see Maksoudian, "Chalcedonian Issue and the Early Bagratids;" Dorfmann-Lazarev, "Armenian-Syrian-Byzantine Council of Širakawan" in Christ in Armenian Tradition, 293–313; idem, Arméniens et Byzantins à l'époque de Photius, 19–23, 56–57 (for the date of the synod), 212–40.

⁶ On these figures, see Dorfmann-Lazarev, Arméniens et Byzantins à l'époque de Photius, 66–79.

⁷ Thomson, "Introduction" in Nonnus of Nisibis, Commentary on the Gospel of Saint John, xviii–xix; Maksoudian, "Chalcedonian Issue and the Early Bagratids," 336–37.

⁸ Nonnus of Nisibis, Commentary on the Gospel of Saint John.

⁹ Thomson, "Introduction" in Nonnus of Nisibis, Commentary on the Gospel of Saint John, xix–xxi.

the contentious context in which it was composed, the commentary is preoccupied with defending miaphysite Christology as formulated by Cyril of Alexandria.¹⁰ Nonnus was imprisoned along with the high-ranking Armenian noble dynasts at Sāmarrā' in the early 850s, and unlike his patron Bagrat, he did not apostatize but rather held to the faith and was later hailed as a confessor upon his release.¹¹ By the time of the synod therefore, Nonnus was a highly respected figure, long known for his stalwart faith and miaphysite convictions, who was comfortable moving in Armenian circles and engaging in Christological debate.

While the complete acts of the synod do not survive, the extant articles associated with it “reflect a disposition towards establishing a modus vivendi between the Monophysite [sic] and Chalcedonian elements in Christian Caucasia,” as Krikor Maksoudian has noted.¹² At this stage, Byzantine influence among the Christian communities of the caliphate was minimal, after over a century of a fixed border zone (thughūr) that separated the imperial church from the Christian communities across the border. The relative weakness of the Byzantine side in this early phase meant it was unable actually to interfere to any significant degree in ecclesiastical or political matters with regard to the Christian communities that remained on the other side of the caliphal border, integrated within the caliphal administrative structure, and under caliphal suzerainty. Nevertheless, pursuing relations marked by mutual good will between the different confessional communities would have been beneficial both to Ašot and the Byzantine emperor (then Michael III). The Byzantine side likely foresaw even at this early phase that its expansion eastwards would be greatly facilitated by the cooperation of the Christian communities in the region, if they were to make common cause against the Muslim adversary. Thus, they aspired for pan-Christian military unity against the Muslim powers, conceived of as a common foe. The Byzantines were presumably also already aware of the growing autonomy of the provincial dynasts in the caliphate and, seeking to exploit the weakening of their ties to the caliphal center, were hoping to cement new relations of amity with themselves. Meanwhile, Ašot was looking to consolidate his position as the pre-eminent ruler in the region, who could maintain the peaceful co-existence of the various confessional communities in the Caucasus.¹³ One recalls that Ašot's relatives, the Bagrationi of Iberia, oversaw a Chalcedonian Christian population in communion with the imperial church. Thus, Ašot had his own special, familial interest in seeking "mutual toleration" over Christological differences. The Bagratid dynast was eager to not allow arcane theological disputes undermine the interests and cohesion of the larger Bagratid noble house.

¹⁰ Thomson, “Introduction” in Nonnus of Nisibis, Commentary on the Gospel of Saint John, xx.

¹¹ Dorfmann-Lazarev, “Armenian-Syrian-Byzantine Council of Širakawan” in Christ in Armenian Tradition, 295.

¹² Maksoudian, “Chalcedonian Issue and the Early Bagratids,” 338.

The Byzantine expansion eastwards picked up pace during the reign of Basil I, who undertook military campaigns in eastern Cappadocia, northern Syria, and western Armenia against the emirates in those territories. Emperor Basil succeeded in taking Sebasteia and keeping it under Byzantine control. Ecclesiastical diplomacy functioning as a branch of Byzantine imperial policy continued in the next decade during Patriarch Photios' second patriarchal term. Extant are epistolary exchanges between the patriarch with prince Ašot and the vardapet bishop Sahak Mřut, the expert theologian who replied on the latter's behalf.¹⁴ It has been noted that they are marked by a general air of amicability, which distinguishes them from other periods of polemical interchange between the two sides.¹⁵ However, this should be seen as a result of the fact that the interchange was not fundamentally about Christological issues, but about diplomacy and furthering political and military ties between the Byzantine state and Bagratuni realm. During these exchanges, Photios also sent a relic of the True Cross, yet when Ašot resisted the Byzantine effort to persuade him to exchange caliphal for Byzantine suzerainty, the epistolary exchanges likewise turned sour, as a result of the failed diplomatic mission to secure Ašot's loyalty. Thus, the final letters reveal both sides "reverting to their traditional positions, defining and rebutting in meticulous detail the doctrinal errors of the others."¹⁶ The Byzantine forces' defeats at Melitenē in 882 and Tarsus in 883 reveal the failure of the Byzantine Empire's foreign policy aspirations vis-à-vis Armenia at this stage. Nevertheless, in 884, as mentioned before, Basil sent Ašot a crown in hopes of persuading the latter to become his (instead of the caliph's) vassal, revealing the extent to which the Byzantine Empire was committed to its foreign policy agenda vis-à-vis Armenia.

¹³ Maksoudian, "Chalcedonian Issue and the Early Bagratids," 336–37.

¹⁴ See Dorfmann-Lazarev, Arméniens et Byzantins à l'époque de Photius, 24–91.

¹⁵ Dorfmann-Lazarev, Arméniens et Byzantins à l'époque de Photius, 241.

During the reign of Basil's successor, Leo VI, Sebasteia was administratively incorporated into the empire as a theme in 911. One is able to observe the next phase in the diplomatic approach conducted through the Constantinopolitan patriarch in an extant letter of Patriarch Nicholas Mystikos (sed. 901–907, 912–925) addressed to Catholicos Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc'i (sed. 898–924) written in 913/4 and preserved in the latter's History of Armenia.¹⁷ The chief aim of this letter was to persuade the Christian peoples of the Caucasus to unite together to make common cause against the Muslim enemy (in this case, Sājīd emīr Abū'l Sāj).¹⁸ It should be seen as further continuation of the Byzantine political and diplomatic agenda

¹⁶ Greenwood, "Armenian Neighbours," 351. See further idem, "Failure of a Mission?"

¹⁷ Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc'i, History of Armenia 54, MH 11:521–24.1–14, tr. Maksoudian, 189–91, tr. Boisson-Chenorhokian, 303–05.

¹⁸ See especially MH 11:523.7–9, tr. Maksoudian, 190, tr. Boisson-Chenorhokian, 305.

seeking to win over the Christian peoples of the Caucasus to its side against the Muslim caliphate and emīrs. In this, Byzantium began to achieve more enduring success, achieving major military advances against the emirates when they captured the important military outposts of Melitenē in 934 and Theodosiupolis (Ar. Qālīqalā, Arm. Karin) in 949, by which the Byzantines took control of Cappadocia. While Armenian military units did not assist in these advances, they at least did not resist them, unlike for example the case in 922, when Ašot II's forces fought against the Byzantine army attacking Duin.¹⁹

THE RESETTLEMENT OF MIAPHYSITE CHRISTIANS INTO IMPERIAL TERRITORY

In order to hold their newly won territories during this first phase of expansion, it was necessary to settle there a population that would be loyal to the empire and willing to defend the lands against the armies of the caliphate and emirates. Miaphysite Syrians and Armenians formed a significant proportion of those who were invited to settle in the area of Sebasteia and Cappadocia, and they took up residence alongside others belonging to the Chalcedonian confessional community.²⁰ While there is little data on the particularities of intercommunal relations there in this early phase, it is reasonable to assume that non-Chalcedonian Armenians and Syrians attended Chalcedonian churches. Many were likely rebaptized as a way of ensuring their full sacramental participation and integrating them into their new setting. It is plausible to assume that there were also non-Chalcedonian churches established to serve the Armenian and Syrian communities that immigrated into the region, especially later in the century when they began to come in larger numbers. When Armenian immigration into the region significantly increased in the latter half of the century, confessional tensions in turn began to arise in the region.

¹⁹ Greenwood, "Armenian Neighbours," 354.

²⁰ On the Syrian and Armenian immigration into these territories, see Cowe, "Armenian Immigration."

From the middle of the tenth century up until the century's end, there is evidence in sources from the period of the way in which ecclesiastical relations between the hierarchs of the different confessional communities turned to mutual hostility, as the freshness of renewed interaction soured with the passing of time and as the clashing ecclesiological views of each side came up against one another. While regional Byzantine hierarchs looked to integrate Armenians into their churches and pursued a policy of assimilation, Armenian hierarchs looked to defend their right to separate existence and autocephaly and prevent their flock from integrating and assimilating. Anania of Narek was one of the vardapets who played a leading role in advising the catholicos most engaged in this struggle, Xaç'ik Aršaruni, who made efforts to counter the threats facing the church.

CATHOLICOS ANANIA MOKAC' I AND THE BEGINNINGS OF CHALCEDONIAN TENSION

On the Armenian side, the catholicosal reign of Anania Mokac' i (941/2 – ca. 963/4 or 965/6)²¹ is marked by a resurgence of hostility on the part of Armenian church leaders towards Chalcedonianism. In the case of Catholicos Anania, we see this at play in the latter's engagement with the secessionist regions of Siwnik' and Ałuank', discussed in the previous chapter. In one of the extant documents surviving from Catholicos Anania, entitled “Concerning the Rebellion of the House of the Albanians, Whose Ordination for Years Was outside of the Throne of the Holy Illuminator (Յաղագս ապստամբութեան տանն Աղուանից որ ընդ ժամանակս լեալ իցէ) ձեռնադրութիւնն արտաքոյ սուրբ Լուսաւորչի աթոռոյն),” he notes how at the outset of his catholicate, he was appalled to discover that some bishops in those realms had accepted the Chalcedonian confession and that some of the princes and general population had married spouses belonging to the Chalcedonian confessional community (a regular phenomenon of dynastic intermarriage).²² Catholicos Anania cites in particular intermarriage between Armenians (Հայ) and Iberians (Վրացի).²³ This situation hearkens back to the turmoil of the late sixth and early seventh century, when, like the Iberians, the Albanian church along with Siwnik’ had broken with the Armenian church, accepted Chalcedon, and temporarily aligned with the imperial church. Unlike the situation with Iberia, however, the Armenian church managed to achieve reunion with Albania. Nevertheless, there was a precedent for an Armenian catholicos like Anania to see Chalcedonian acceptance as a pretext for secession or as two sides of a single threat, and Anania portrays the present situation as such in his letter. For Siwnik’ and Albania, the profession of Chalcedonianism should be interpreted first and foremost as a way of distinguishing themselves from the Armenian Church and thus providing a justification for secession and autocephaly, following the secessionist tendencies also at work on the political plane as part of this broader trend. As for intermarriage, of course, among the noble classes, marriages naturally were made for political alliances and to cement dynastic ties, and not primarily for expressing creedal solidarity or confessional beliefs. In line with the political trends

²¹ On the uncertainty surrounding the dates of his catholicosal tenure, see Greenwood, Universal History, 222 n. 91 and 92, 232 n. 155.

²² Եւ ի հաւատալ Տեառնն ինձ գհաւտ իւր, գնեալ քաջաբեր արեամբն, յապուշ եղեալ զարհուրեցայ եւ երկիւղ մեծ պաշարեաց զիս, զի նկատեալ զիրի իրի նշկահումն, որ եղեալ էր յեկեղեցիս Աստուծոյ, գտի զոմանս [յ]եպիսկոպոսաց ապստամբեալս, եւ զոմանս յիշխանաց գաւառապետաց եւ զայլ խառնիճաղանճ ամբոխս քրիստոնէից ի խառն ամուսնութիւն քաղկեդոնականաց: MH 10:256.8.

²³ Anania of Mokk’, “Concerning the Rebellion of the House of the Albanians, Whose Ordination for Years Was outside of the Throne of the Holy Illuminator” MH 10:256.9. It is possible that this refers simply to non-Chalcedonians and Chalcedonians respectively, as the latter term was also a sobriquet applied to Chalcedonian Armenian in this period. On the use of Վրացի in reference to Chalcedonian Armenians, also pejoratively called Cayd (or Cad or Cayt’ or Cat’), see Garsoïan, “Problem of Armenian Integration,” 104; Arutjunova-Fidanjan, “Ethno-Confessional Self-Awareness.” However, in the present context it is likely that it refers to actual Iberians.

of the era, where fragmentation and the rise of local autonomous rule was sought after by the nobility, Albania and Siwnik[՝] sought autonomy on the political and ecclesiastical plane. As mentioned in the previous chapter, in addition to the secessionist aspirations of the local nobility and hierarchs, which were likely the fundamental motivation at play, part of the jurisdictional and hierarchical disputes regarding the consecration of the miwron and the irregular ordination of the metropolitan of Siwnik[՝] and catholicos of Ałuank[՝] was the presence of pro-Chalcedonian leanings among hierarchs in those same regions. In his letter, Catholicos Anania cites bishops and leading princes in those regions who had converted to Chalcedonianism and thus broken ties with the miaphysite hierarchy.²⁴ Later in the same letter, he goes on to state that his chief desire was “to purge the heresy of Chalcedon that had begun to sprout, spreading in the land of Armenia like a cancer taking hold of the whole realm,” making a pun with the words ‘Chalcedon (Քաղկեդոն)’ and ‘cancer (քաղցկեղ).’²⁵ His emphasis on enforcing the boundaries separating the different confessional communities was part of his larger aim to reassert the authority of the Armenian catholicos over the Caucasian Albanian catholicos and the metropolitan of Siwnik[՝]. As the Byzantine advance drew close to Armenian territory, the catholicos was likely triggered by the correlation between secession and pro-Chalcedonianism and feared a repeat of earlier history. As discussed in the previous chapter, he then made a concerted and prolonged effort to demand the submission of the Albanian catholicos and Siwnid metropolitan, and reassert the primacy of the Armenian church. As Step[՝]anos Tarōnec[՝] i relates, he also “commanded those ²⁴ Anania of Mokk[՝], “Concerning the Rebellion of the House of the Albanians, Whose Ordination for Years Was outside of the Throne of the Holy Illuminator” MH 10:258.22–24.

²⁵ Եւ նախ կամեցաք մաքրել զընծիւղեալ աղանդ Քաղկեդոնի, որ յաշխարհիս Հայոց իբր քաղցկեղ ճարակէր եւ զբոլոր աշխարհս էր կալեալ: Anania of Mokk[՝], “Concerning the Rebellion of the House of the Albanians, Whose Ordination for Years Was outside of the Throne of the Holy Illuminator” MH 10:259.40.

baptized Chalcedonian to be baptized a second time”²⁶ thus further enforcing the communal boundaries under his catholicosal primacy. Thus, Anania Mokac‘i’s catholicate is marked by a defense of the anti-chalcedonian position of the Armenian church, its institutional and existential separateness from the imperial church, and its claim to primacy over the other regions of the realms of the Caucasus seeking autocephaly (Ałuank‘ and Siwnik‘).²⁷

Despite Catholicos Anania’s strong stance against Chalcedonianism in Siwnik‘, it was Vahan, metropolitan of Siwnik‘, who was chosen as his immediate successor at a conclave presided over by Bagratid King Ašot III Ołormac. Perhaps in selecting Vahan the Bagratid king was seeking to cement relations politically with Siwnik‘, since the latter was aiming for secession from the Bagratuni realm. Given the hostile atmosphere among Armenian clerics towards all things Chalcedonian, the election of Catholicos Vahan incited a strong reaction from Armenian hierarchs, especially once Vahan began to seek amicable relations with the Chalcedonian Iberians. According to Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Vahan “expressed a desire to create amity and agreeable relations with the Chalcedonians through epistles.”²⁸ Later historians and chroniclers, such as Step‘anos Ōrbelean, Vardan Arewelc‘i, and Kirakos Ganjakec‘i, note that Vahan had icons brought from Iberia, which were installed on the altars of Armenian churches.²⁹ These amicable exchanges with the Chalcedonian Iberians drew the ire of anti-Chalcedonian Armenian clerics. A gathering of anti-Chalcedonian senior bishops and vardapets thus convened ²⁶ Հրամանաւ Տեառն Անանիայի գթադիւզողոնական մկրտեալսն կրկին անգամ հրամայեցին մկրտել: Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.7, MH 15:754.54; tr. Greenwood, 229.

²⁷ As Patricia Boisson, who has recently translated and studied the extant works of the catholicos, states, “Le catholicos Anania Mokac‘i consacre la quasi-totalité de son pontificat à la défense des positions antichalcédoniennes de l’Église arménienne.” See Boisson et al., “Trois opuscules d’Anania Mokac‘i,” 772.

²⁸ Սա ընդ քաղկեդոնական սիրելութիւն եւ հաճութիւն կամեցաւ առնել թղթովք: Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.8, MH 15.809.10.

²⁹ Step‘anos Ōrbelean, History of Siwnik‘ 53; Vardan Arewelc‘i, Compilation of Armenian History 47; Kirakos Ganjakec‘i, History of Armenia, 87.

in the city of Ani, calling upon the Bagratid king to remove the catholicos. Among those who gathered, Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i singles out “Lord Xaç‘ik, bishop of Aršarunik‘, father Polykarpos, abbot of Kamrjajor, father Sargis, a monk of the community of Hořomos, and father Step‘anos, a monk of the monastery of Sewan (Տէր Խաչիկ՝ Արշարունեաց եպիսկոպոս եւ հայր Պողիկարպոս՝ առաջնորդ Կամրջաձորոյ եւ հայրն Սարգիս՝ Հռոմոսի վանաց վանական եւ հայր Ստեփանոս՝ Սեւանայ վանաց վանական)” among “many other bishops and fathers (այլ եպիսկոպոսունք եւ հարք բազումք).”³⁰ Before any action could be taken by the king one way or the other, Catholicos Vahan fled to Vaspurakan and took refuge with the Arcrunid dynast, Apusahl Hamazasp. A new catholicos was elected in his place, the aforementioned Step‘anos Sewanc‘i, and both anathematized the other, thus initiating a short-lived schism. After a couple of years, both died within a short time of the other, and the schism was resolved with the election of bishop Xaç‘ik Aršaruni, a close associate of Anania of Narek, and one of those who had gathered against Catholicos Vahan in Ani. Catholicos Xaç‘ik carried on the legacy of Catholicos Anania Mokac‘i, who was his maternal uncle, by making the defense of the Armenian Church’s confession of faith and its institutional autonomy a high priority, in collaboration with Anania of Narek and other senior vardapets, an issue to which we will turn shortly.

CATHOLICOS XAČ‘IK ARŠARUNI AND CONFESSIONAL CONFLICT IN IMPERIAL TERRITORY

The period of greatest tension in relations between the non-Chalcedonian and Chalcedonian clerics in the region began after the beginning of the Byzantine expansion into Greater Armenia, as the empire sought to incorporate the realms of Armenian princes into the empire. The first such Armenian realm to be annexed was Tarōn, after the death of its prince Ašot in 966/7.³¹ Following the incorporation of new territories into the empire, the Byzantine Church naturally sought the integration of non-Chalcedonians into the imperial church through acceptance of Chalcedon and rebaptism. Integrating or assimilating Armenians who immigrated into its realm or when the Byzantine Empire took over territory with an Armenian-majority population was the standard policy known from previous centuries.³² However, the much larger numbers of immigrant and relocated miaphysite communities led to a new situation in the late tenth century, distinguished from earlier periods of immigration westwards into the Byzantine state by the size and scale of those belonging to miaphysite communities, where in places like Sebasteia, Cappadocia, and Tarōn, miaphysite Armenians formed a majority of the population. Efforts to integrate and assimilate the miaphysite ecclesiastical bodies naturally began at the top. Thus, in 966, the Syrian patriarch was summoned to Constantinople for theological discussions and detained there until his release by Phocas' successor John Tzimiskes in 969.³³ These developments were probably known in Armenia and may have influenced the strong reaction of the anti-Chalcedonian Armenian hierarchs against Catholicos Vahan mentioned above, events which coincided precisely with these developments. A couple decades later, we hear of the rise and rapid escalation of confessional tensions between pro- and anti-Chalcedonian hierarchs and their communities in Sebasteia and Cappadocia, with coercive and then violent measures taken against miaphysite Armenian priests and bishops (on which, see below).

³⁰ MH 15:756.12, tr. Greenwood, 233.

³¹ Greenwood, "Armenian Neighbours," 357.

³² On the Byzantine policy of integration in earlier periods, see Charanis, Armenians in the Byzantine Empire; Garsoïan, "Problem of Armenian Integration;" Kaldellis, Ethnicity and Empire, especially pp. 123–195.

³³ Cowe, "Armenian Immigration," 114.

It is those two regions that became the principal foci of tension between Chalcedonian and non-Chalcedonian hierarchs, who found themselves in the unprecedented situation of administering overlapping episcopal jurisdictions. While hard evidence is lacking for this region, it is reasonable to assume that the local Byzantine bishops advanced a policy of rebaptizing non-Chalcedonian Armenians according to the Byzantine rite and Chalcedonian confession of faith in order to integrate them into the imperial churches. This follows the process established in the earlier period of expansion into Armenian territory, when the empire imposed Chalcedon and Byzantine liturgics on the Armenian population in their jurisdiction, and the Armenian miaphysite hierarchy fought to resist this imposition.³⁴ Now that the Armenian church had miaphysite bishops in the same area, they naturally resisted such a policy, and in retaliatory response, adopted the same policy of rebaptizing those Armenians in their churches who had been baptized Chalcedonian.³⁵ This defensive move advanced in response to a Byzantine offensive parallels the literary defense advanced in response to the Byzantine attack in the theological and ecclesiological realm, which will be discussed in detail below.

Diverse Armenian Responses to Byzantine Expansion

Armenian responses to Byzantine expansion and the effort to integrate Armenians into the empire were mixed and diverse. Some, seeing themselves outmatched by the powerful ³⁴ See Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 69, pp. 89–91; Mahé, “L’Église arménienne,” 462–468.

³⁵ It is otherwise difficult to explain the policy advanced by Catholicos Xaç’ik Aršaruni at the advice of the leading vardapets of the day, such as Anania of Narek, to rebaptize those who had been baptized Chalcedonian. See Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:534.732, where he provides a liturgical/theological rationale for rebaptizing those baptized Chalcedonian. Anania also commissioned the History of Uxtanēs, whose third book deals with the rebaptism of the Cayd, on which see below. On the rebaptizing of Armenians by Chalcedonians in this period, see Garsoïan, “Problem of Armenian Integration,” 72–73; Step’anos Tarōnec’i, Universal History III.30. For other examples, see Toumanoff, Studies in Christian Caucasian History, 476–77, n. 171; Preiser-Kapeller, “Aristocrats, Mercenaries,” 362.

Byzantine army, saw little choice but to accede to the Byzantine state's demands and make the best of a bad situation. On the political plane, one sees this through the way in which dynasts such as Arcruni King Senek'erim-Yovhannēs exchanged his lands in Vaspurakan for Sebasteia in 1021. Others looked for opportunities in the current situation to improve their chance of survival and advance their own interests. One may note the monastery of Glak at Innaknean [Glakavank'; Innakneavank'; S. Karapet at Muš]³⁶ as an example of the latter. In the aftermath of the Byzantine takeover of Tarōn, this monastic community re-presented their past — in a work known as the History of Tarōn — so as to make themselves appear acceptable and gain the favor of their new Byzantine overlords in Tarōn. Their successful rebranding enabled them to endure not just the contemporaneous changes, but also endure as the principal holy site in the region up until the twentieth century.

The History of Tarōn purports to be the work of two authors: Zenob of Glak, first abbot of the monastery in the fourth century (appointed by S. Grigor the Illuminator), whose first part records the conversion of Armenia in the early fourth century as well as activity involving the monastery; and Yovhannēs Mamikonean, seventh-century bishop of the Mamikonean house, who translated Zenob's original Greek composition and compiled and wrote the second portion, which relates to events transpiring in Tarōn during his own time.³⁷ However, Levon Avdoyan has argued against this traditional attribution, demonstrating convincingly that the work issues from a tenth-century context, specifically after 966 (the Byzantine annexation of Tarōn) and before 989/90 (the terminus ante quem for the completion of Uxtanēs' History, which uses the

³⁶ Thierry, Répertoire des monastères arméniens, no. 368, p. 70.

³⁷ Avdoyan, Pseudeo-Yovhannēs Mamikonean, 1.

History of Tarōn).³⁸ More recently, Tim Greenwood has uncovered how the History of Tarōn's retelling of the Armenian Christian fourth-century past was used to bolster the position of the monastery in the tenth century, presenting itself as the principal site of pilgrimage and devotional worship in Tarōn, a position it then was able to maintain up until the early twentieth century.³⁹ It achieved this by rewriting the topography of the Armenian conversion narrative, presenting not Aštišat, but the location of the monastery of Glak as the site at which S. Grigor first destroyed the pagan shrines and built in their place a martyrium for the relics of St. John the Baptist (S. Karapet).⁴⁰ It also creates multiple connections between S. Grigor the Illuminator, the monastery of Glak, and the metropolitan of Caesarea, thereby bolstering the role of the imperial church in the conversion of Armenia and presenting Armenian-imperial relations as harmonious and mutually beneficial.⁴¹ In connection with this latter point, it is significant that throughout the latter half of the text, which deals with the seventh century, there is no hint of confessional tension between the Armenian and imperial church, which one may interpret as an indication of the ingratiating stance of the tenth-century author towards the new ruling power, brought about by the expediency of the new political realities at play in tenth-century Tarōn.⁴² The text also records the dispatch of several members of the clerical élite from the metropolitan of Caesarea into Tarōn, who are unknown from other sources such as Agat'angelos, to assist with S. Grigor's evangelizing efforts.⁴³ This narrative element in the fourth-century depiction of S. Grigor's evangelization mission may be interpreted as the monastery's acceptance of a new phenomenon ³⁸ Avdoyan, Pseudeo-Yovhannēs Mamikonean, 42–47. For the dating of Uxtanēs' History, see Greenwood, Universal History, 23.

³⁹ Greenwood, "Imagined Past, Revealed Present;" idem, Universal History, 17–21.

⁴⁰ Greenwood, Universal History, 18.

⁴¹ Greenwood, Universal History, 19–20.

⁴² Greenwood, Universal History, 21.

⁴³ Greenwood, Universal History, 19–20.

taking place in the latter half of the tenth century, the establishment of imperial episcopal sees in the region: the see of Tarōn itself, one at Muš, one in Xoyt' and one at Katsoun.⁴⁴ As Greenwood concludes, the monastery of Glak took advantage of the “radical political and social restructuring following the departure of the existing lay and clerical elite” in Tarōn, by working with the new status quo to bolster its own position regionally and “advertise itself as the principal centre of pilgrimage and devotional worship in Tarōn.”⁴⁵ A survival strategy may be detected in the text, as the author sought to make as broad an appeal as possible, desiring to attract patronage and pilgrimage from all local Christians, regardless of their confessional belonging.

Reading against the grain and between the lines of Uxtanēs' History of Armenia, Kosuke Nakada has recently speculated over the extent to which that text, which is hostile to Byzantine authority and Chalcedonianism, attests to the contemporary existence of pro-Byzantine and pro-Chalcedonian sentiments in segments of the Armenian population in Byzantine Sebasteia.⁴⁶ Armenians were a diverse community, and Sebasteia, like other regions, exemplifies the variety of contemporary responses to the Byzantine Empire and their eastwards expansion that are observable across the Armenian population and oikoumené. Nevertheless, it must be stated that the extant sources contain little mention of soft power and diplomacy at work in Sebasteia. On the contrary, it is the location of the harshest coercive measures taken against miaphysite clerics (see below).

⁴⁴ Greenwood, “Imagined Past, Revealed Present,” 384.

⁴⁵ Greenwood, Universal History, 19.

⁴⁶ Nakada, “Uxtanēs of Sebasteia.”

The Response of the Leading Vardapets to the Byzantine Policy of Assimilation

Uxtanēs was one among a cluster of vardapets and high-ranking clerics, who united together and strove collectively to defend the autonomy and integrity of the miaphysite Armenian confession and community against the Byzantine ecclesiastical agenda of assimilation and the compulsory means that began to be employed against miaphysite Armenian bishops in imperial territory (on which, see below). Foremost among these were the vardapets Anania of Narek and Samuēl Kamrġajorec‘i, Catholicos Xaç‘ik Aršaruni, and Uxtanēs, bishop of Sebasteia. All had close ties with Anania and collaborated together in the joint effort. As he relates in the letter/dedication to Anania that introduces his History, Uxtanēs had not only been Anania’s pupil at Narek but Anania had commissioned Uxtanēs to write the History and in a series of meetings and epistolary exchanges, had helped him to plan it and draft an outline.⁴⁷ Xaç‘ik and Anania shared a similar upbringing and had collaborated on a number of different projects during their careers, the latter commissioning multiple literary works from the former.⁴⁸ Samuēl, in his Explanation of Feasts, refers to his own discussions with Anania over liturgical and theological matters significant to the contemporary debates with the Byzantines (specifically, the Fast of the First-Fruits [առաջաւոր պահք], a difference of liturgical practice that became a point of controversy in the polemical exchanges in this period).⁴⁹ Related differences in fasting and ⁴⁷ Uxtanēs, History of Armenia I, MH 15:446–455, tr. Arzoumanian, 11–20.

⁴⁸ On Catholicos Xaç‘ik’s ties with Anania, see T‘amrazyan, Anania Narekats‘i, 14–53.

⁴⁹ “The beginning of the fast of the catechumens, the first week was called ‘First-fruits’ and after the second week [was called] ‘Good Living’ [i.e., Mardi Gras]. Not only Basil said this, but also my own vardapet Step‘anos Kamrġajorec‘i and also others who preceded. Likewise both vardapets Petros and Anania, who formerly dwelt in Antak‘ and then in Xawarajor and later in Narek, taught the same thing... Vardapet Georg said this. Because although he knew all and about all, yet the origin was Cyril who set this as an institution. From him I heard this, and on one occasion I told this to vardapet Anania at Narek, and he, surprised, said, ‘that explanation of yours [of the origin] is hidden from all,’ because he had written much concerning the origins of the fast of the ‘First-fruits,’ yet he had not written this. I am not able to write the many examples and explanations [of the origins] due to the length of the discourse, so I will only indicate what was said. Սկիզբն երախայից պահոցն առաջին շաբաթն Առաջաւորք liturgical practice had come up earlier at the Council of Trullo (or the Quinisext council) in 692, in which certain canons went out of their way to denounce contemporary Armenian practices and differentiate Byzantine liturgical practice from Armenian usage.⁵⁰ It is thus no surprise that such issues came to the fore again in this period.

Action on the Ground: Rebaptism

The group worked together both through ecclesiastical activity on the ground and by crafting a strong literary defense of the Armenian faith and church with their pens in response to Byzantine attack. On the ecclesiastical administrative plane, two areas stand out. One was the establishment of new bishoprics in imperial territory, which was warranted because of the large Armenian population that required pastoral care. The second was the rebaptism of Armenians who had been baptized Chalcedonian and were called Cayd (or Cad or Cayt ‘ or Cat), a pejorative term meaning ‘half’ or ‘incomplete’ or ‘deficient’ or ‘hybrid’ to designate the way in which they were neither fully Roman nor fully Armenian.⁵¹ The third book of Uxtanēs’ History (no longer extant) treated the rebaptism of these Chalcedonian Armenians, describing the districts in which they lived, and providing detailed information about those areas, including անուանեցան, եւ զկնի Բ շաբաթն՝ բարեկենդանութիւնք: Ջայս ոչ միայն Բարսիլիոս ասէր, այլ եւ վարդապետն իմ Ստեփանոս Կամրջաճորեցի եւ այլք, որք էին: Նոյնպէս եւ Պետրոս եւ Անանիա վարդապետք, որ յառաջագոյն յԱնտաք եւ ապա ի Խաւարաճոր եւ յետոյ ի Նարեկ բնակեցան, զնոյն վարդապետէին: ... Ջայս ասաց Գեորգ վարդապետ: Ջի թեպետ եւ զամենեցուն եւ զամենայն գիտէր, այլ սկիզբն զայս դնէր Կիւրղի դրութեանն: Ի նմանէ լուա եւ երբեմն Անանիաի վարդապետի ասացի ի Նարեկի, եւ նա զարմացեալ ասաց, թէ յամենեցունց ծածկեալ է այդ պատճառդ, զի ինքն վասն Առաջաւորաց բազում պատճառս գրեալ էր եւ զայս ոչ էր գրեալ: Ջայս բազում աւրինակս եւ զպատճառս վասն երկայնագոյն բանից ոչ կարեմ գրել, այլ միայն նշանակեմ զասացեալսն: MH 10:720.18–29.

⁵⁰ See Herrin, “The Quinisext Council,” 159–61.

⁵¹ See Arutjunova-Fidanyan, “Ethno-Confessional Self-Awareness,” 354–57; Garsoïan, “Problem of Armenian Integration,” 104–109; Greenwood, Universal History, 21–22; NBHL, s.v. Cayd; Achaëan, Hayerēn armatakan baġaran, s.v. Cayt ‘.

where they had villages and cities, fortresses, and monasteries.⁵² By Uxtanēs’ testimony (see previous note), this took place in collaboration with King Smbat (r. 977–989) and other nobles, and thus belongs to the catholicosial tenure and at the initiative of Catholicos Xaç‘ik (972/3–990/1) and his close collaborators, one of the most important of whom was Anania. This mission at large should be seen as a miaphysite Armenian response to the efforts of the Chalcedonian imperial Church to assimilate Armenians and integrate them into the church of the empire. We unfortunately lack details as to the specifics of the way in which the Armenian Church rebaptized Chalcedonian Armenians, due to the third book of Uxtanēs’ History being lost. Given that it took place in Byzantine territory, it is likely that it was towards Armenians who already desired to return to the miaphysite Armenian Church. It would be hard to imagine that the Armenian Church had the ability or power to coerce or enforce Armenians in imperial territory to return to their church.

⁵² In the letter to Anania in which he gives an outline of the work to come, Uxtanēs indicates that he plans to include in his third book a description of “the baptism of the nation called Cad, their districts and the principal villages and cities and fortresses, organized by district, which are in that country, just as your will commanded; and the monasteries with their monks, each by name, and the remote places of the hermits, both those who live in communities and those who live by themselves, whether in inhabited or uninhabited places, in order to illustrate the power of God which worked in secret and openly on those who have been baptized, through the appearance of signs and miracles, visions and manifestations, all together spiritual works. And the speech and the care and the labour and the testimony of the bishops of [the see of] the blessed Grigor and his servants, the cooperation and command of king Smbat and the enthusiasm of the nobles for this spiritual work, and the testimony of the princes, according to each one’s authority, and the other members of the elite, according to each one’s honour, those who worked with us in this discourse and spiritual endeavour [զմկրտութիւն ազգին՝ որ Մաղն կոչի. նա եւ զգաւառս, եւ զգեղս գլխաւորս, եւ զքաղաքս, եւ զբերդս իւրաքանչիւր գաւառաւք՝ որ են յաշխարհին յայնմիկ՝ որպէս եւ կամք քո հրամայեցին, եւ զվանաւրայս հանդերձ վանականաւք՝ անուամբ իւրաքանչիւրոց, եւ զանապատս միայնաւորաց, եւ որք բազմակեցք եւ որ միայնակեացք բնակեալ յապատս եւ յանապատս, եւ զաւրինակ ցուցանել զաւրութեանն Աստուծոյ. որ ի ծածուկ եւ ի յայտնի գործէր ի մկրտեայսն՝ երեւմամբ նշանաց եւ արուեստից՝ տեսեամբ եւ յայտնութեամբ, միանգամայն եւ զգործս հոգեւորս. ե՛ւ զբան ե՛ւ զջան ե՛ւ զվաստակ ե՛ւ զհանդէս երանելի եպիսկոպոսացն Գրիգորի՝ եւ իւրոյ պաշտանէիցն, զգործակցութիւն եւ զհրաման թագաւորին Սմբատայ, եւ զնախանձ նախարարացն ի հոգեւոր գործն, եւ զհանդէս իշխանացն ըստ իւրաքանչիւր իշխանութեան, եւ զայլ եւս պատուաւորացն ըստ իւրաքանչիւր պատուոյ, որք գործակիցք լինէին մեզ ի բանս եւ ի գործ հոգեւոր].” Uxtanēs, History of Armenia I, MH 15:454–55.66, tr. Greenwood, Universal History, 22.

The second major initiative taken on the ecclesiastical administrative plane to counter the Byzantine imperialist agenda was the establishment of Armenian miaphysite episcopal sees in imperial territory, already referred to previously. Under Catholic Xaç'ik, Armenian miaphysite episcopal sees had been established in other areas of imperial territory with an Armenian population. Step'anos Tarōnec'i connects this development with the large increase in the number of Armenians that had spread into the newly reconquered Byzantine territory:

In the days of lord Xaç'ik, patriarch of Armenia, this people of Armenia spread and extended across the regions of the west, to the extent that he consecrated bishops for it in Antioch of Syria, in Tarsus of Cilicia, and in Sulind [or Sulund], and in all these districts.⁵³

Tarsus was taken by the Byzantines in 965 and Antioch in 969.⁵⁴ It is thus likely that a number of new episcopal sees were founded in the 970s and 980s in Cilicia, Sebasteia, and other regions of imperial territory where there was a large Armenian population. Anania of Narek provides further information about such territories with miaphysite bishops in his Root of Faith (see below). Anania's pupil Uxtanēs was himself bishop of Sebasteia, probably taking over after the defection of Sion of Sebasteia (see below), and is believed to have written his History while in residence there.⁵⁵

⁵³ Իսկ յաւուրս Տեառն Խաչկայ հայրապետին Հայոց սիրեալ տարածեցաւ ազգս Հայոց զկողմամբքն արեւմտից, մինչեւ ձեռնադրել նմա եպիսկոպոսունս յԱնտիոք Ասորւոց եւ ի Տարսոն Կիլիկեցւոց եւ ի Սուլինդայ եւ յամենայն գաւառսն յայնոսիկ: Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.31, MH 15:810.1, tr. Greenwood, 295. See Bozoyan, "L'Église et l'identité arméniennes," 414. The location of "Sulind," which may be a corrupt form, is unknown. For a discussion of possibilities, see Macler, Histoire Universelle, 141–42, who inclines towards the opinion that it is a corrupt form of Seleucia. Another possibility is Laranda in Cilicia.

⁵⁴ See Greenwood, Universal History, 295 n. 520.

⁵⁵ It is unclear whether he was in charge of the see before the defection of Bishop Sion of Sebasteia in 986/7 or whether he took up the post immediately afterwards. See Kolanjian, "Ukhtanes the Historian."

We know definitely that two Armenian sees were established in the theme of Sebasteia, one in the city of Sebasteia and the other in Larissa, before 986/7, because Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i records that in that year two Armenian miaphysite bishops, Sion of Sebasteia and Yovhannēs of Larissa, along with a number of “insignificant priests (այլք յաննչան քահանայիցն)” accepted the Council of Chalcedon under fear of torture, exchanging affiliation with the Armenian Church for the imperial one.⁵⁶ The defection of these bishops and the derogatory reference to those priests is presented in sharp contrast to the “leading priests of the city of Sebasteia (զգլխաւոր քահանայս Սեբաստիոյ քաղաքին),” who were tortured “for their faith (վասն հաւատոյ),” by the local imperial bishops, but nevertheless refused to capitulate.⁵⁷ As this episode forms the immediate background to the exchange of disputatious theological letters that forms the subject of the second half of this chapter, the passage in question deserves to be quoted in full. After describing the relocation of Armenians to Macedon by Basil II, Step‘anos writes:

And the effeminate pastors and the metropolitan of Sebasteia began to oppress the people of Armenia in matters of faith. He had recourse to violence and began to torture the priests concerning faith, and he conveyed the leading priests of the city of Sebasteia in iron chains to the court of the king. Having been ill-treated in prison, the senior one of the priests, Gabriēl, was killed; he was an old man and full of knowledge and steadfast in this divine faith. This occurred in 435 of the Era (986/7 AD). Then others, insignificant priests and two bishops of Sebasteia and Larissa, Sion and Yovhannēs, through the same metropolitan, accepted the Council of Chalcedon and were excluded from the unanimity of Armenians. And from that time they banned the Armenian call to prayer in the city of Sebasteia until king Basil came to the country of the east, which we shall recount in its place.⁵⁸

⁵⁶ Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.20, MH 15:769.6, tr. Greenwood, 252. Larissa is located about 50 miles south east of Sebasteia and was then a tourma of the theme of Sebasteia. See Greenwood, Universal History, 252, n. 275. For a map, see Hewsens, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 105, p. 125.

⁵⁷ Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i, Universal History III.20, MH 15:769.3–4, tr. Greenwood, 252.

⁵⁸ Եւ կանացի հովիւքն եւ մետրապաւլիտն Սեբաստիոյ սկսան նեղել զազգն Հայոց վասն հաւատոյ. եւ զբռնութիւնն ի ձեռն առեալ՝ սկսաւ տանջել զքահանայս վասն հաւատոյ, եւ զգլխաւոր քահանայս Սեբաստիոյ քաղաքին երկաթեղէն կապանաւք հասուցանեն ի դուռն թագաւորին: Եւ ի բանտի չարչարեալ զաւագն երիցանցն զԳաբրիէլ, սպանին, զի էր այր ծեր եւ իմաստիւք լի եւ քաջապինդ ի հաւատս աստուածեղէնս: Այս եղեւ ի ՆԼԵ թուականին: Իսկ այլք յաննչան քահանայիցն եւ երկու եպիսկոպոստոնք Սեբաստիոյ եւ Լառիսոյ, Սիոն եւ Յովհաննէս, ի ձեռն նոյն մետրապաւլտին ընդալան զժողովն Քաղկեդոնի՝ ի բաց կայով ի միաւորութենէն Հայոց: Եւ յայնմհետէ արգելին զժամաձայն Հայոց ի քաղաքէն Սեբաստիոյ մինչեւ ցգալ

It is important here to distinguish the policy of the local Byzantine hierarchs of Sebasteia from the tolerance promoted by Basil II, whose clemency was a part of his diplomatic agenda in Armenia. The local Byzantine hierarchs were likely acting on their own initiative without reference to policies coming from Constantinople, whether from the royal or patriarchal court. It is in the shadow of these tense relations and violent actions that we may now turn to a series of theological exchanges in which Anania played a major role.

Action with the Pen: The Literary Defense

In addition to taking the step of rebaptizing Armenians baptized Chalcedonian and establishing episcopal sees in Byzantine territory, the group of high-ranking clerics and vardapets mounted a literary campaign in response to Byzantine letters that attacked their beliefs and right to autocephaly. After the description of violent coercion carried out upon the Armenian miaphysite community in Sebasteia, and the repressive measure of banning them from employing the call to prayer (semantron),⁵⁹ Stepʿanos Tarōnecʿi writes:

That metropolitan [of Sebasteia] and other metropolitans began to write very long letters to lord Xačʿik, catholicos of Armenia. The previously mentioned vardapets replied to them using very powerful arguments; we have deemed it appropriate to include one of the letters at this point.⁶⁰

Թագաւորին Վասիլ յաշխարհն արեւելից, զոր յիւրում տեղւոջն ասացուք: Stepʿanos Tarōnecʿi, Universal History III.20, MH 15:769–70.3–7, tr. Greenwood, 252 (slightly modified).

⁵⁹ This policy was reversed ca. 1000 by Emperor Basil, who on a visit in person to Sebasteia, allowed the Armenian clerics to “be free in all religious practices and to sound the call of the bell-ringer which the metropolitan had banned [համարձակ լինել յամենայն գործս հաւատոց եւ հնչեցուցանել զձայն ժամահարի, զոր արգելեալ էր մետրապաւլիտն].” Stepʿanos Tarōnecʿi, Universal History III.43, MH15:822.7, tr. Greenwood, 308.

⁶⁰ Եւ ապա մետրապաւլիտն այն եւ այլ մետրապաւլիտք սկսան թուղթս մեծամեծս գրել առ Տէր Խաչիկ Հայոց կաթողիկոս: Որոց ընդդէմ պատասխանեալ քաջակորով իմաստիւք յառաջ ասացեալ վարդապետքն, զոր պարտ համարեցաք զմի ի թղթոցն կարգել յայսմ վայրի: Stepʿanos Tarōnecʿi, Universal History III.20, MH 15:770.8–9, tr. Greenwood, 252.

While the original letters of the Byzantine metropolitans in question do not survive, a collection of extant documents provide a vivid picture of the literary defense mobilized by the leading vardapets of the day, who also crafted the reply of Catholicos Xaç'ik to the letter sent by the metropolitan of Sebasteia.⁶¹ The chronology of these documents is difficult to establish, and precise dating does not seem possible. The letter of Samuēl Kamrġajorec'ī, written at the command of Catholicos Xaç'ik, in reply to a letter sent from Theodore, metropolitan of Melitenē, is perhaps the earliest of the documents.⁶² According to Matt'ēos Urhayec'ī (Matthew of Edessa), this letter was written in 985/6.⁶³ Then there is Catholicos Xaç'ik's "Reply" (composed not by him but by vardapet theologians), which has been dated to ca. 986/7, based on the part of Step'anos Tarōnec'ī's Universal History in which it is placed. The third and most lengthy is Anania's Root of Faith, which Catholicos Xaç'ik had commissioned to aid in the defense of the Armenian church, its theology and liturgical practices, in response to the denunciatory letters sent by Byzantine bishops and in light of the uptick of hostilities between the imperial and non-Chalcedonian confessional communities that marked the catholicate of Xaç'ik. From the letter of dedication in Uxtanēs's History, already referred to several times above, we learn that Anania delivered this lengthy work to Catholicos Xaç'ik at his residence in Argina in the summer of either 980 or 987, at which time Anania also commissioned Uxtanēs to write the latter's History, which may be viewed as another of the documents that comprise the Armenian Church's response to Byzantine imperialism.⁶⁴ T'amrazyan has argued that Anania's ⁶¹ The lengthy reply of Catholicos Xaç'ik comprises the next chapter of Step'anos Tarōnec'ī's Universal History. See MH 15:770–800; tr. Greenwood, 253–283.

⁶² "Letter of Samuēl Kamrġajorec'ī," MH 10:747–761; Book of Letters-1, 302–322; Book of Letters-2, 550–579.

⁶³ Matt'ēos Urhayec'ī, Chronicle, I.34, tr. Dostourian, 39.

⁶⁴ For a discussion of the details surrounding this meeting and the date in question, see T'amrazyan, Anania Narekats'ī, 39–43; Greenwood, Universal History, 7. The terminus ante quem for the date of Uxtanēs' History is the winter of 989/90 (the death of Smbat II). On the date of the meeting between Xaç'ik, Anania, and Uxtanēs in

Root of Faith formed one of the chief sources from which Catholicos Xaç'ik's reply was crafted, which would be unsurprising given the close connections between the two and the evidence from Step'anos Tarōnec'i cited above that signals the role of the vardapets in composing Catholicos Xaç'ik's reply.⁶⁵ Similarities between the two works seems to confirm a connection between them, although it does not seem possible to tell which was written first.⁶⁶ In any case, Anania's perspective should be seen in the "Reply" of Xaç'ik. Nevertheless, it does not seem possible to establish whether the Root of Faith was composed and delivered in 980, before the outbreak of the worst hostilities and before the letters sent by the metropolitans of Sebasteia and Melitenē, or afterwards in 987. If the latter date, then Anania's Root of Faith may instead be seen as an expansion upon the earlier letters, prepared in order to be a more exhaustive resource and reference work to be utilized as occasion demanded in further correspondence and defense from Byzantine polemicists. In addition to Anania's Root of Faith, Xaç'ik's "Reply," and Samuēl's letter, the History of Uxtanēs is a fourth extant document that forms part of this collaborative literary response to Byzantine aggression. It was certainly composed after the Root of Faith, and likely after the other two letters, since we know that Anania and Uxtanēs spoke together to plan its contents on the occasion when Anania delivered the Root of Faith to Catholicos Xaç'ik in person at his residence in Argina.

Sebasteia, Greenwood reasons, "If the meeting did take place in early July 987, Uxtanēs completed his History in two and a half years. This is a narrow time-frame for the composition, but by no means an impossible one. Both dates remain viable." See Greenwood, Universal History, 23. Another factor to consider is that Uxtanēs is thought to have written his History while bishop of Sebasteia. If Sion defected in 986/7, did Uxtanēs fill the post after him, or was he bishop of Sebasteia before him, as Kolanjian supposes (with little evidence or argumentation)? See Kolanjian, "Ukhtanes the Historian," 151–52

⁶⁵ T'amrazyan, "Anania Narekats'ov 'Hawatarmat' dawanabanakan erkč," in MH 10:475–76.

⁶⁶ On which, see T'amrazyan, "Anania Narekats'ov 'Hawatarmat' dawanabanakan erkč," in MH 10:475–76.

These four documents, when read together, form a vivid picture of the way in which the Armenian Church defended its own faith and autonomy in light of the Byzantine expansion. The rest of the chapter will be devoted to an explication of this defense, examining some of the methods and argumentation that formed the vardapets' literary defense of the Armenian Church. Our focus will be on the three documents issuing from the Armenian vardapets, rather than Uxtanēs' History, since the latter text has already received greater scholarly attention. My goal is not to get into the details of the theological and Christological differences, as such topics have been covered before in previous scholarship that has examined the different periods of the long history of debates between the dyophysite and miaphysite churches.⁶⁷ Rather, my goal is to illustrate the way in which the Armenian vardapets responded to the claim that their church was heretical and schismatic and had no right to exist separately from the imperial church and its Chalcedonian theology.

Although the original letters sent by the Byzantine bishops to the Armenian catholicos are no longer extant, a reading of the sources composed by the Armenian vardapets allows one also to recover some of the principal arguments and assertions made by the Byzantine side, which the vardapets counter in the course of their replies. It will be helpful then to proceed by reconstructing some of the original arguments and points made against the Armenian Church by the Byzantine ecclesiasts who wrote to them, and then noting the way in which the Armenian vardapets composed their defense.

The Armenian vardapets responded to the attacks of the Byzantine Church by defending their understanding of Christology not by referring to the interpretation/argumentation of their own (native Armenian) theologians and fathers, but by appealing to the Christological views of the pre-Chalcedonian Greek fathers, who were revered as fathers and saints by the Byzantine bishops and theologians with whom they were in dialogue.⁶⁸ Thus, reading through Anania's Root of Faith, Catholicos Xaç'ik's "Reply," and Samuēl's "Letter," one encounters dozens of quotations from pre-Chalcedonian Greek fathers, who are cited or brought together to support the Armenian perspective in a manner resembling florilegia. This approach draws on an earlier tradition, as seen for example, in Timothy Aelurus' Refutation of Chalcedon. The Armenian vardapets mined earlier florilegia, such as Aelurus' Refutation, the Seal of Faith, and Step'anos Siwnec'i's On the Incorruptibility of the Body of Christ in order to respond to the attacks of the Byzantine bishops.⁶⁹ The most notable such figures, and those most commonly cited are the Cappadocian fathers — Basil of Caesarea, Gregory of Nyssa, and especially Gregory of Nazianzus ("The Theologian") — Irenaeus, Cyril of Alexandria and Cyril of Jerusalem, Athanasius of Alexandria, Epiphanius of Salamis, John Chrysostom, and Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite (believed to be a first-century author).⁷⁰ These are obviously the main figures of the Greek patristic era and thus the highest authorities that could be brought to bear on the debates. As they explain in the works being examined here, this was an explicit strategy on the part of the Armenian vardapets, transmitted from past generations. For example, after listing a number of such early Greek fathers on whom the Armenians rely and from whom their understanding of Christology derives, Samuēl Kamrġajorec‘i writes:

⁶⁷ As a starting point, see Garsoïan, L'Église arménienne et le grand schisme; Dorfmann-Lazarev, Arméniens et Byzantins à l'époque de Photius; idem, Christ in Armenian Tradition; Augé, Églises en dialogue.

⁶⁸ This point has been noted before by others who have examined the theological debates and polemical exchanges between the Byzantine and Armenian Churches in various centuries. See, for example, Terian, "Miaphysites, Armenian."

⁶⁹ For passages used by Anania of Narek in his Root of Faith with parallels in the Seal of Faith, see, for example, MH 10:540–41.826–29, MH 10:541–42.844–61, MH 10:542–43.862–78, MH 10:544.887–88, MH 10:545–46.915–17, MH 10:546.918–19, MH 10:546.920–25, MH 10:546–47.926–33, MH 10:547.942–44, MH 10:547–48.945–49, MH 10:548.950–54. For passages with parallels in Step'anos Siwnec'i's On the Incorruptibility of the Body of Christ, see, for example, MH 10:541–42.844–61, MH 10:542–43.862–78, MH 10:544.885–86, MH 10:544.889–90, MH 10:544.893–94, MH 10:544–45.896–98, MH 10:545.903–04, MH 10:545.906–09, MH 10:547.937–41. For passages with parallels in Timothy Aelurus' Refutation of Chalcedon, see, for example, MH 10:540.821–25, MH 10:585.1414.

⁷⁰ For a fuller list, see "Letter of Samuēl Kamrājorec'i," MH 10:749.27.

So, if you claim that we are alien to the Church of God, first say that all these [fathers] are alien, for these are our vardapets and teachers, and we know no one else at all. Although by claiming that they are alien, you alienate yourself from your own hope.⁷¹

Anania employs the same strategy in his defense of various Armenian liturgical practices that differed from contemporary Byzantine usage and thus were attacked on the grounds of being theologically deviant or heretical. For example, after defending the Armenian practice (a continuation of the early Church practice) of celebrating Christmas and the Baptism of Christ on the same day (January 6th) and citing a number of patristic authorities to support this practice, Anania writes, “We learned this from the holy fathers of Nicaea, and we hold fast to that which we received, and have not departed from it. But you do not follow the way of your own fathers.”⁷² This approach of the tenth-century Armenian vardapets is made quite explicit in the “Reply” of Catholicos Xac‘ik, where we find the following statement:

⁷¹ Արդ, դու, եթէ ատար ասես զմեզ յԱստուծոյ եկեղեցւոյ, նախ ասա՛ ատար զսոսա զամենեսեան, զի սոքա են վարդապետք մեր եւ ուսուցիչք, եւ զայլ ոք բնաւ ոչ գիտեմք, եւ ատար զսոսա ասելով՝ ատարանաս եւ դու ի յուսոյն քումմէ: “Letter of Samuēl Kamrġajorec‘i,” MH 10:750.30.

⁷² Մեք աշակերտեմք սրբոց հարցն, որ ի Նիկիա, եւ զոր առաքն, հաստատուն ունիմք եւ ոչ թիւրեցաք. դուք, եթէ ոչ զձերոց հարցն դնացէք ճանապարհ...: Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:569.1214. Likewise, after defending Armenian customs regarding communion practices with citations from Scripture and various fathers, Anania states, “So then, if there is so much testimony from the Holy Scriptures and your own vardapets, then from where did you learn to indiscriminately give communion to your unworthy people, especially on Holy Thursday, when it is not [fitting] for all the laity to commune, but only the priests, as Our Lord Jesus Christ taught us, when he distributed it only to those twelve [disciples] although there were many who had been his disciples and believed in him... [Եւ արդ, եթէ այս ամենայն վկայութիւն Գրոց Սրբոց եւ ձերոց վարդապետաց են, ուստի՞ ուսայք անխտիր հաղորդեցուցանել անարժան ժողովրդեան ձերոյ, մանաւանդ՝ յաւուր Մեծի հինգշաբաթին, որ ոչ է ամենեցուն ժողովրդականաց հաղորդել, բայց միայն քահանայիցն, որպէս ուսոյց մեզ Տէր մեր Յիսուս Քրիստոս, այն երկոտասանիցն միայն բաշխեաց, թէպէտ եւ բազումք գոյին աշակերտեալք եւ հաւատացեալք ի նա...] Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:535.749.

Not only did we not develop an argument against you makers of division⁷³ through them and by means of them;⁷⁴ we did not even do so through the vardapets of our own kith and kin, from whom we have been taught. For just as we do not debate with Jews using the teaching of the Evangelists and the Apostles, but induce them to believe through their own prophets, so also for you, we composed treatises using different and multiple citations from your own vardapets and those who have become beacons in your own country, so that the triumph over all schismatics and filthy sects may be all the more evident and noticeable.⁷⁵

Thus, the tenth-century Armenian vardapets defended their position by appealing to fathers universally recognized by all the Christian churches of the time,⁷⁶ and not by appealing to their own native Church fathers. By arguing with the Byzantine bishops according to the Christological understanding of their own early fathers, the Armenian vardapets shifted the nature of the debate, forcing the bishops to disavow (or explain away) the teaching of their own ⁷³ “Makers of division (բաժանողացող)” appears to be a double entendre, signifying both the way in which his interlocutors divide the nature of Christ according to their dyophysite Christology, and, perhaps more significantly, the way in which they cause division in the Church by anathematizing those who disagree with the definitions of Chalcedon.

⁷⁴ Referring to Dioscorus of Alexandria and Peter ‘the Fuller’ of Antioch, whom the Byzantine polemicists claimed that the Armenians followed, as a result of which they had deviant views. This is a recurrent claim in the exchanges of the period. Samuēl responds to such claims with the following caustic lines: “But as for Dioscorus, who you are so frequently reproving us with in your argumentation, let me ask you, and you tell me, ‘Who is that Dioscorus? Is he not your patriarch, head and leader of the third Council of Ephesus?’ Who has neither a confessional letter, nor a definition of faith, nor any other tradition to be found in the Armenian realm....So, if he is worthy of confidence, let him be accepted, but if he thinks something foreign, what is it to us, since he is one of yours? [Այլ որ Դիոսկորոսի ստեղծող ստեղծող թշնամանեա զմեզ իրաւաբանելով, հարցանեմ զքեզ, ասա՛ ինձ՝ ո՛վ է Դիոսկորոսն այն. ո՞չ ապաքէն հայրապետ քո է, գլուխ եւ առաջնորդ երրորդ ժողովոյն, որ յԵփեսոս, զորոյ ո՛չ գիր խոստովանութեան, եւ ո՛չ սահման հաւատոց եւ ո՛չ այլ ինչ աւանդութիւն ունի աշխարհս Հայոց...Արդ, նա, եթէ արժանի հաւատարմութեան է, ընկալեալ լիցի. եւ եթէ աւտար ինչ խորհի, մեզ չէ ինչ փոյթ, վասն զի քո է:]” “Letter of Samuēl Kamrjajorec ‘i,” MH 10:751.41–42. Although regarded a saint in the Coptic and West Syriac traditions, he is not so officially in the Armenian tradition, nor could I find any writing of Dioscorus of Alexandria extant in Armenian, apart from quotations in early florilegia such as the Seal of Faith and the Refutation of Chalcedon by Timothy Aelurus. See Thomson, Bibliography, 45. In his Root of Faith, Anania of Narek, in referring to him as the successor of Cyril does call him “thrice-blessed (փոխանորդ նորա երիցս երանելին Դիոսկորոս),” but does not include any citations from him or his writings. See MH 10:575.1288.

⁷⁵ Մեք ո՛չ միայն, զի նոքաք եւ ի ձեռն նոցա բան դնեմք ընդդէմ բաժանողացող, այլ եւ ո՛չ ազգական եւ սեռն ընտանի եւ ուսուցիչ վարդապետաւք մերոք [sic], այլ որպէս ընդ հրէայսն ո՛չ աւետարանական եւ առաքելական վարդապետութեամբք վիճեմք, այլ ի նոցունց մարգարէիցն հաւանեցուցանէմք սոյնպէս եւ ընդ ձեզ, ի վարդապետաց ձերոց եւ որ յաշխարհ ձեր պայծառացան՝ բանադիր լինիմք յողնազան եւ բազմապատիկ պիտառութեամբք, զի առաւել երեւելի եւ նշանաւոր յաղթութիւնն լիցի ամենայն հերձուածողաց եւ պիղծ աւանդիցն: Xačik Aršaruni. “Reply,” MH 10:680.195.

⁷⁶ With the exception of the East Syriac Church, which did not accept the Council of Ephesus, or those fathers such as Cyril of Alexandria, whose Christological writings played an influential role in that council.

fathers in order to counter the Armenian position.⁷⁷ The vardapets were well aware of their upper hand in this aspect of the debate, since the Chalcedonian formulation “in two natures” represented a traditional Latin formula and was foreign to Greek Christology before that time.

Another argument advanced by Byzantine polemicists was that the Armenian Church did not accept the Council of Chalcedon solely because they weren’t there, or out of spite due to not being invited. Anania reports this assertion being made by contemporary opponents:

And there are some of you who ignorantly counter by saying that “Armenians did not accept the Council of Chalcedon simply out of a desire for contrariness, because none of them were called to the Council of Chalcedon.”⁷⁸

The Byzantine emperor only had the right to invite those within his own jurisdiction to the council, and in 451, when the council was held, Greater Armenia lay entirely within the Sasanian Empire.⁷⁹ Therefore, it was impossible for him to summon Armenian delegates to the council. In fact, Armenians were only represented at Nicaea, but accepted the acts of Constantinople and Ephesus, even though they were not represented at those councils.

Relatedly, there were claims that Armenians did not understand the Christology of the council and were subsequently led astray by heretical leaders. Samuēl reports this kind of claim in the following passage:

You were worried about us Armenians, as if we were alien to the Church of God, stupid and ignorant of reason and wisdom. You reproved us, saying, “You do not recognize what is besmirched, because some had earlier sown among you the darnel of evil.” You slandered our fathers as holding spurious formulae which were not theirs and claimed,

⁷⁷ They obviously were averse to doing so, and thus it is not surprising that many of the debates tended to revolve instead around concrete differences in liturgical practices and customs. See Terian, “Miaphysites, Armenian.”

⁷⁸ Այլ եւ են ոմանք, որք տգիտաբար հակառակիք եւ ասէք, թէ հայք միայն ոչ ընկալան գծողովն Քաղկեդոնի վասն նախանձու հակառակութեան, վասն ոչ զոք կոչելոյ ի նոցանէ ի ժողովն Քաղկեդոնի: Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:557.1063.

⁷⁹ See Hewsen, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, map 65, p. 85; map 67, p. 88.

“For that reason, you do not accept the Council of Chalcedon, having been persuaded by Dioscorus, who said ‘Christ [is] one nature.’”⁸⁰

The vardapets response to such claims was that they understand the Christology of Chalcedon perfectly well, and the issue they have with it is that it contradicts the definitions of the first three councils and the theology of the early fathers of the church, citations from whom they filled their letters with. Thus, Samuēl explains,

But in regard to our not accepting the Council of Chalcedon — which you say is holy and on a par with the first three councils — we did not learn that from Dioscorus, but from their own definitions and from the Tome of Leo of Rome, which was the occasion and cause for the Council of Chalcedon, which did not agree with the confession of the first holy fathers, which we had accepted.⁸¹

The Tome of Leo, from its first introduction to eastern theologians at the Council of Chalcedon, met fierce resistance by those who supported Cyril of Alexandria’s miaphysite Christology, as it clearly contradicted the Cyrillian formula of “one incarnate nature of God the Word (μία φύσις τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγου σεσαρκωμένη).” Its acceptance at Chalcedon was seen to contradict the earlier council of Ephesus, and for that reason was never accepted by those committed to the Cyrillian definition of Christology.⁸² Anania was an heir to this tradition. One must also bear in mind that Armenians did not have access to the full text of Leo’s Tome but only the expurgated version known from Aelurus’ Refutation, which included only the most extreme dyophysite portions.⁸³ Anania thus argues with full assurance that the Council of Chalcedon departs from the faith of

⁸⁰ Հոգացեալ էրք եւ զմեզ՝ զՀայաստանեայս, որպէս աւտարս գորով յեկեղեցւոյ Աստուծոյ, ախմարս եւ տգէտս բանիւ եւ իմաստութեամբ, եւ մեղադրեալ, թէ զարատաւորն ոչ ճանաչէք, զի ոմանք յառաջնոցն անտի սերմանեցին ի ձեզ զորումն չարին՝ զրպարտելով զհարսն մեր ի բանս սուտս, զոր ոչ նոցա, եւ վասն այնր ոչ ընդունիք զժողովն Քաղկեդոնի՝ հաւանեալք Դիոսկորոսի, որ մի բնութիւն ասաց զՔրիստոս: “Letter of Samuēl Kamrjajorec ‘i,” MH 10:748.20.

⁸¹ Բայց վասն ոչ ընդունելոյ մեր զժողովն Քաղկեդոնի, զոր ասես դու սուրբ եւ հաւասար երկց ժողովոցն, զայդ ոչ ի Դիոսկորոսէ ուսաք մեք, այլ ի նոցունց սահմանադրութեանցն եւ ի Տոմարէն Լեւոնի Հռոմայեցւոյ, որ էր առիթ եւ պատճառ ժողովոյն Քաղկեդոնի, որք ոչ միաբանին խոստովանութեան առաջին սրբոց հարցն, զոր ընկալաք մեք: “Letter of Samuēl Kamrjajorec ‘i,” MH 10:751.43.

⁸² On resistance to the Tome of Leo at the Council of Chalcedon, see Price, “The Council of Chalcedon.”

⁸³ See Cowe, “The Tome of Leo.”

the first three councils, adding an additional point against it, namely, that there was no consensus in the establishment of its definition. He writes:

The faith which they established was not through the will of consensus, which was a rule for councils — to establish the truth of the faith through love and unison of the assemblies, if it happens to be aright — but they made [its acceptance] obligatory by violent means, since whoever would not agree with the evil council would have to step aside from their authority [over their diocese].⁸⁴

Anania then gives examples of emperors that attempted to impose the Council of Chalcedon by force upon those Christian communities that did not accept it, citing Marcian (r. 450–457), who convened the council, as well as Justin I (518–527) and Justinian (527–565).⁸⁵ Anania was well aware of the coercive methods taken to enforce acceptance of Chalcedon and of bishops who were deposed for opposing it.⁸⁶ This leads into another point of debate that recurred in the controversy of the period.

These are the related issues of size and scale, one of the salient and visible differences between the Chalcedonian church of the empire in its close confrontation in this period with the much smaller Armenian church. The Chalcedonian bishops leveraged to their advantage the fact that while the Byzantine Empire is large, Armenia is small. They argued that the large Byzantine Empire is united and holds to the same belief, while the Armenians are lone outsiders that have veered off into a false direction with erroneous beliefs. Each of the three documents counter this claim in a related way. Samuēl writes:

⁸⁴ Հաւատան, զոր հաստատեցին ոչ կամաւ հաւանութեամբ, որպէս ակրէն էր ժողովոց սիրով եւ միաբանութեամբ ատենից հաստատել զճշմարտութիւն հաւատոյն, եթէ ուղիղ հանդիպի, այլ բռնութեամբ հարկ արարին, զի որ ոչ հաւանեսցի չար ժողովոյն, ի բաց կացցէ յիշխանութենէն: Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:557.1063.

⁸⁵ Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:557.1064–66.

⁸⁶ On Marcian’s coercive methods for imposing acceptance of the council, see Price, “The Council of Chalcedon,” 82; Price, “Truth, Omission, and Fiction,” 95. On miaphysite bishops such as Severus of Antioch and Peter of Apamea being deposed by Justin and on Justinian’s efforts to remove opposition to Chalcedon, see, for example, Millar, “The Syriac Acts,” 65.

For we are not alone in not sharing in the Council of Chalcedon. But there are many other nations than those which you wrote in your letter. There is a multitude of nations that do not accept the Council of Chalcedon, including Armenia, Caucasian Albania, the Lupenians,⁸⁷ the Kalp‘k‘,⁸⁸ the Čilbk‘,⁸⁹ the Syrians who are Jacobites, all Egypt, great Ethiopia, Arabia, Arapinar,⁹⁰ and the whole realm of India. All these do not accept the Council of Chalcedon, but along with us say “one nature of the incarnate Logos,”⁹¹ although they each have various distinctions and their own religious customs.⁹²

The vardapets who composed Catholicos Xaç‘ik’s “Reply,” are responding to the same argument from a different angle when they say, “If faith is defined in terms of numbers or wealth, the barbarian Persians and the savage Arabs and those who are beyond, at the end of the universe, are more numerous and opulent than you.”⁹³ This issue is responded to most thoroughly by Anania of Narek in the Root of Faith. There, he counters with the point that only by force was Justinian able to impose acceptance of the Council of Chalcedon upon those within the empire.⁹⁴ By contrast, there is universal consensus outside of the empire in rejecting the Council of Chalcedon:

It is very evident that the other nations, which are not under the same rule, have not accepted the faith of Chalcedon. I will reveal just how many regions there are who are

⁸⁷ On the Lupenians, see Hewsens, “The Kingdom of the Lupenians;” idem, “On the Location of the Lupenians;” idem, Geography of Ananias of Širak, 119 n. 87, 246 n. 82A.

⁸⁸ I have been unable to identify this people/nation.

⁸⁹ On this people, see Hewsens, Geography of Ananias of Širak, 55A, 57, 119 n. 85, 245 n. 76A, 246 n. 85A.

⁹⁰ I have been unable to identify this place.

⁹¹ A quotation of the Cyrillian formula “one incarnate nature of God the Word (μία φύσις τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγου σεσαρκωμένη),” whose Christology prevailed at the Council of Ephesus (431) and became the key definition for miaphysite theology and those churches outside the empire who maintained that definition in opposition to the definition of Chalcedon. See McGuckin, St. Cyril of Alexandria.

⁹² Զի ոչ եթէ միայն մեք ոչ հաղորդիմք ժողովոյն Քաղկեդոնի, այլ առաւել եւս քան զազգսն, զոր քո ի թղթի աստ գրեալ էիր, են եւ այլ եւս բազմութիւնք ազգաց, որք ոչ ընդունին զժողովոյն Քաղկեդոնի, որպիսիք ամենայն Հայք, Աղուանք, Լիւիւնք, Կաղփք, Ճիղբք, Ասորեստանեայք, որք են Յակոբիկ, ամենայն Եգիպտոս, Եթիոպա մեծ, Արաբիա, Արապիւնար, եւ ամենայն աշխարհն Հնդկաց. ամենեքեան սոքա ոչ ընդունին զժողովն Քաղկեդոնի, այլ ընդ մեզ մի բնութիւն ասեն Բանին մարմնացելոյ. թէպէտ եւ ունին ինչ բաժանմունս եւ կրաւնս իւրաքանչիւր: “Letter of Samuēl Kamrjajorec‘i,” MH 10:761.159.

⁹³ Եւ եթէ բազմութեամբ կամ մեծութեամբ հաւատ սահմանի՝ խուժքն Պարսից եւ դուժքն Տաճկաց եւ եւս անդր, որք ի ծայր եզերաց տիեզերաց բազումք եւ փարթամք են, քան զձեզ: Xaçik Aršaruni. “Reply,” MH 10:1945, tr. Greenwood, Universal History, 277–78.

⁹⁴ Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:557.1066.

with us in not accepting their [sc. Byzantine/Chalcedonian bishops'] faith, up until the present day.⁹⁵

The list that follows is even longer and more comprehensive than that of Samuēl's quoted above, including Christian communities in geographical locations as far east as China.⁹⁶ These replies from the vardapets counteract one of the recurrent points levelled against Armenians by Byzantine polemicists, by reversing the facts of the argument. According to the vardapets, there is in fact broad consensus outside of the empire. It is only those areas within the empire that (through force) have come to accept Chalcedon. Armenia experienced this approach first hand in the late sixth and seventh centuries when Chalcedonian orthodoxy was imposed through force on those areas that came under Byzantine military control.⁹⁷ In Anania's and the vardapets' portrayal, there is universal consensus in rejecting Chalcedon among those peoples located outside of the empire, while the empire's acceptance of the Council of Chalcedon looks parochial and thuggish by contrast, maintained only through force.

Anania makes a further point in the same passage, noting how there are even many bishops within the empire that reject Chalcedon. After making this point, he provides a list of those areas within the empire that have bishops who do not accept the Chalcedonian faith, and instead agree with the faith of the Armenians.⁹⁸ This is a significant passage, and deserves to be quoted in full:

⁹⁵ Ահա քաջայայտ է, զի յայլ ազգս, որ ոչ ընդ նոյն իշխանութեամբ են, ոչ ընկալան զհաւատն Քաղկեդոնի, զորս յայտ ցուցից, թէ որչափ գաւառք են, որ ընդ մեզ են եւ ոչ ընդունին զնոցայն հաւատ մինչեւ ցայսաւր: Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:557.1067.

⁹⁶ Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:558.1071–1080.

⁹⁷ See Mahé, “L'Église arménienne,” 462–68.

⁹⁸ Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:557.1068–70.

Also those which are under their rule, are there not many who do not hold to their faith but to ours? Look at how many bishops there are in your Middleland,⁹⁹ in Asia, in Cappadocia, in Bithynia, in Galatia, in Asia Proper (Idia),¹⁰⁰ in Lystra in Cilicia, in Tarsus, in Mesopotamia, in Phrygia, as well as all the Syrians under our authority in Cappadocia, in Gangara,¹⁰¹ near the Pontus and on the other side of it, in T'arsis in Macedonia, as well as those who were formerly under your authority, are there not many bishops, ordained by the Armenians, who stand fast in the true faith, not wavering from the three holy councils in Nicaea, Constantinople, and Ephesus, and the faith defined by S. Grigor? We have bishops in all those districts obedient to the see of S. Grigor. And in addition to this we have many other nations in the faith of the three holy councils, who like us and along with us anathematize the Council of Chalcedon.¹⁰²

This passage attests to the fact that there were bishops within the Byzantine empire in the 980s that rejected the Council of Chalcedon, and aligned with the faith of the Armenian church. This provides some further evidence on the activity of the Armenian Church in the Byzantine sphere. As mentioned above, we hear from Step'anos Tarōnec'i of Armenian bishoprics founded in the theme of Sebastia (one in the city of Sebasteia and the other in Larissa) as well as in Cilicia at Tarsus, in Syria at Antioch, and Sulind(?) (or Sulund?). From Step'anos we also learn that Armenians were transferred to Macedonia by the Emperor Basil II in the early 980s.¹⁰³

Presumably, an episcopal see was established to serve the community there around that same ⁹⁹ The 'Middleland' refers to the Anatolian Peninsula or Asia Minor in general, i.e. the land located between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean Sea. See Hewsens, Geography of Ananias of Širak, 45A, 52, 52A 55A, 100 n. 1, 242 n. 12A.

¹⁰⁰ See Hewsens, Geography of Ananias of Širak, 52, 52A, 101 n. 26.

¹⁰¹ Also called Gētaru or Gaitara. See Hewsens, Geography of Ananias of Širak, 143–44 n. 65, 145 n. 76, 248 n. 104A, 306, 329.

¹⁰² Նա եւ որ ընդ նոցա իշխանութեամբ են, ո՞չ ահա բազում այն են, որ ոչ զնոցայն, այլ մերս ունին հաւատ, եւ տե՛ս, որչափ եպիսկոպոստունք կան ի Միջերկրեայսդ: յԱսիայ եւ ի Գամիրս եւ ի Բութանիա եւ ի Գաղատիա եւ ի յառանձնակ Ասիա եւ ի Լիւստրիայ ի Կիլիկիա եւ ի Տարսուս եւ ի Միջագէտս եւ ի Փռիւքիայ եւ բոլոր յամենայն Ասորիք ընդ մերով իշխանութեամբ ի Գամիրս եւ ի Գանգրա եւ ի մերձ ի Պոնդոս եւ յայնկոյս՝ ի Թարսիս ի Մակեդոնիա եւ որք միանգամ ընդ ձերով իշխանութեամբ են, ո՞չ ահա բազում եպիսկոպոստունք, ի հայոց ձեռնադրեալ, հաստատուն կան ի ճշմարտութեան հաւատս՝ ոչ թիւրեալ յերկց սուրբ ժողովոյն՝ ի Նիկիայն, ի Կոստանդնուպալսին եւ յԵփեսոսին եւ ի սրբոյն Գրիգորի սահմանեալ հաւատսն: Եւ զայդ ամենայն զաւառաց եպիսկոպոստունք ունիմք հնազանդութիւն աթոռ [sic] սրբոյն Գրիգորի: Եւ ի վերայ այսր ունիմք եւ զայլ ազգս բազումս ի հաւատս երկց սուրբ ժողովոյն, որպէս մեք, եւ նզովեն զժողովն Քաղկեդոնի ընդ մեզ: Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:557–58.1068–70. There is a textual problem with the penultimate sentence (no textual variants are given for this work in the MH edition). Presumably, the original would have read: Եւ զայդ ամենայն զաւառաց եպիսկոպոստունս ունիմք ի հնազանդութիւն աթոռոյ սրբոյն Գրիգորի:

¹⁰³ Step'anos Tarōnec'i, Universal History III.20, MH 15:769.1–2, tr. Greenwood, 251–52.

time.¹⁰⁴ This information from Anania of Narek's Root of Faith attests to other areas of the Byzantine empire where there were bishops who rejected Chalcedon and were aligned with the Armenian Church. Anania refers to three different categories of such bishops. There are those episcopal sees founded by the Armenian Church in places such as Sebasteia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, and elsewhere. Secondly, there are those who were under the jurisdiction of (or in accord with) the Armenian Church like the Syriac bishops mentioned. Finally, there are those who presumably broke ranks with the Byzantine Church and aligned with the Armenian Church. In this last category, Anania may be referring to bishops who rejected Chalcedon and dyophysite Christology and professed miaphysite Christology, thus coming into Christological agreement with all those miaphysite churches outside of the empire.

This passage provides further information on the areas where the Armenian church was able to establish episcopal sees and appoint bishops during the catholicate of Xaç'ik Aršaruni.¹⁰⁵ It also may be considered in conjunction with the brief description Uxtanēs gives in his dedicatory letter to Anania that opens his History, which provides a brief description of the otherwise lost third book of Uxtanēs, wherein he would have described the communities of Cayd (see note 32 above); i.e. those Chalcedonian Armenians who had left the Byzantine Church and been rebaptized by the Armenian Church.

It is by following the course of this same logic that Anania is able to counteract the Byzantine claim that the Armenians broke away from the universal church when they rejected the Council of Chalcedon. Thus, while disputing practices surrounding the Fast of the First-Fruits near the end of the work, Anania writes:

¹⁰⁴ In an earlier period, similar transfers of Armenians were ordered by the Emperor Maurice as recounted by Sebēos. See Greenwood, Universal History, 251–52, n. 271. On the Byzantine practice of population transfer, see Charanis, "Transfer of Population." On Armenian mobility in the period, see Preiser-Kapeller, "Aristocrats, Mercenaries."

¹⁰⁵ It is also possible that some of the locations in this passage are later interpolations, since Anania of Narek's text does not exist in its original form but was reworked by later figures such as Anania of Sanahin.

Now then, if you wish to inquire into the origin of the Fast of the First-Fruits, I will tell you openly. For there is nothing secretive about our confession, which we received in truth from S. Grigor, and which we will preserve steadfastly forever, which you also received along with us and preserved up until the separation of your faith from ours.¹⁰⁶

According to the view of the vardapets, represented here by Anania, given the universal consensus outside of the empire, it is in fact the imperial church that broke away from the faith of the fathers encapsulated in the first three councils, whereas the Armenian Church, like those elsewhere outside of the empire, have preserved it.

In this chapter, we have recovered the significance of the role played by Anania of Narek in the confrontation of the Armenian and imperial churches in the latter half of the tenth century. In response to the Byzantine agenda to assimilate and integrate Armenia into the empire politically and ecclesiastically and in response to polemical attacks from Byzantine bishops in the newly reconquered territories on the eastern edge of the empire, the vardapets united together under the leadership of Catholicos Xaç'ik Aršaruni to craft a robust literary defense. The voice of Anania and his contemporaries represents a cogent response to this reality taking place on the ground and in epistolary exchanges. Through a reading of Anania's Root of Faith in conjunction with documents extant from the vardapets and ecclesiasts who collaborated together in this defense, we were able to compile a vivid picture of the way in which the Armenian Church defended not just its right to existence — jeopardized by the imperialistic agenda of the ¹⁰⁶ Բայց արդ, եթէ կամիք զպատճառս պահոց Առաջաւորացն խնդրել՝ ասացից. յայտնապէս եւ ոչ ծածուկ ինչ է մեր դաւանութիւնս, զոր ճշմարտիւ ընդալաք ի սրբոյն Գրիգորէ, եւ հաստատութեամբ պահեմք մինչեւ յաւիտեան, զոր եւ դուք ընդալալք ընդ մեզ եւ պահիցէք մինչեւ ցհաւատոյդ որոշումն ի մէնջ: Anania of Narek, Root of Faith, MH 10:593.1515.

Byzantine Church during its period of expansion in the late tenth century — but its claim to be the preservers of the authentic faith of the early Christian church and fathers, which the imperial church had abandoned and forsaken as a result of the Christology of Chalcedon, which contradicted the Christology of the earlier councils. Rather than an aberrant church following its own direction in isolation from universal Christianity, in the vardapets’ portrayal, it is the imperial church that parochially has followed its own independent direction, whereas there is universal consensus outside of the empire, among the Christian communities of Egypt, Ethiopia, the Middle East, the Caucasus, India, and China. This is a perspective that has rarely been heard in scholarship treating the ecclesiastical debates and differences between the Byzantine and Oriental orthodox communions.

CONCLUSION

This dissertation has recovered the significance of a little known figure of the tenth-century AD, Anania of Narek, and through his works and activities has offered new perspectives on several of the major regional developments of the period in which he lived and actively participated. The first chapter set the stage by providing a general overview to the period, situating Armenia in relation to the complex and dynamic political, social, and economic realities that marked it as a contested space between the 'Abbāsīd Caliphate and Byzantine Empire from the middle of the ninth to the middle of the eleventh centuries. Considering Anania's life and literary works as intermeshed with developments occurring in the broader region has allowed for a richer appreciation of this significant figure that is not limited to the Armenian literary and intellectual tradition narrowly defined.

The starting point of the second chapter was Anania's role as first abbot of Narek monastery. The founding of Narekavank⁶ was contextualized within the regional proliferation of civic and religious building activity in the wider region from the mid-ninth to mid-eleventh centuries. A rich picture of the integration of Armenia within the larger caliphal economy, its role in the facilitation of international trade, and the growing autonomy and consequently decreased level of taxes paid by Armenian dynasts to the caliphal center, provided an explanation for the vast amounts of disposable wealth available to the Bagratuni, Arcruni, and Siwni rulers of the period, some of which they funneled into construction projects. This period is marked by a regional proliferation of large, permanently endowed cenobitic institutions, many of which endured into the modern period. The dynastic patronage of monastic centers and holy sites was one major means of bolstering a family's public image and marking their control over a territory. The foundation of Narekavank[՝] was contextualized within the dominance of the Arcruni family across Vaspurakan and its prestigious rise to preeminence vis-à-vis the other noble Armenian families under the ambitious career of King Gagik in the first half of the tenth century. Narek monastery's founding correlates to the period of Arcruni political dominance over the Bagratunis and the temporary relocation of the catholicos' see to Alt[՝]amar. I argued that Narekavank[՝] was founded to be a spiritual and intellectual center located near the Arcruni capital at Ostan and Alt[՝]amar in tandem with King Gagik's co-opting of political and ecclesiastical authority from his Bagratuni rivals to the North. In the same manner, Anania and his companion vardapet Petros were relocated from monasteries in the Bagratid realm and invited to lead the direction of the monastery of Narekavank[՝]. This chapter also contributed to research on the founding and dating of the monasteries established in this period. It determined that the 935 date that has been attached to the founding of Narekavank[՝] is simply an approximation plucked from the margin of Ch[՝]amch[՝]ean's History, and that no more certainty could be established in regard to the actual date of its founding than the period between the 930s–940s. What is significant about the founding of Narek and other monasteries of this period is not the exact date, but the circumstances during which the monastery was founded, as well as the prestige the monastery gained over time through the activities of its abbots and renowned vardapets. Finally, the chapter contributed to a scholarly debate on the agents who were active in the founding of the monastery. Following Maksoudian, I argued for seeing the establishment of Narekavank[՝] and the other monasteries founded at this time as owing to the joint agency and initiative of the noble dynasts that funded them and the vardapet abbots who directed them. Nevertheless, I argued that not every aspect of the oft-cited opinion that the monasteries were founded by miaphysite Armenian monks fleeing persecution from Byzantine territory during a (spurious) persecution under the reign of Nikephoras Phokas should be dispensed with. The period is one of population movements and the mixing of peoples and communities, and it is by no means unlikely that there were Grecophone and perhaps also Syrophone monks at monasteries like Narek and other notable intellectual centers, such as Horomos, whose very name may preserve a memory of the presence of such figures from the East Roman Empire. Finally, the chapter summarized what was new about the cenobitic institutions founded in this period, namely their permanent, fixed structures and endowments and their much larger size and scale than the previous cenobitic circles of late antiquity.

The third chapter continued the lines taken up at the end of the second chapter, elaborating further on the various roles played by medieval Armenian monasteries. Cenobitic institutions had a variety of functions. Some were royal mausoleums, others secured family wealth, housed relics and became sites of pilgrimage and thus generators of income, while others provided lodging for wayfarers and traveling merchants. It then narrowed in on the handful of monasteries founded in the ninth to tenth centuries that developed academies for the training of vardapets. Narekavank[՝] was one of the very first of the monastic academies to be founded and as such it bore oversized influence on the shape and direction of subsequent academies. Therefore, the impact of Anania's educational program at Narekavank[՝] had great significance not just for the future generations formed at Narek (Grigor, Uxtanēs) but also on the future Armenian intellectual tradition, since monasteries served as the principal intellectual centers in the Armenian oikoumené into the early modern period. Making use of Anania of Narek's Book of Instruction and other sources, this chapter presented a reconstruction of the holistic educational program at Narekavank[՝], which was focused not just on intellectual pursuits, but aimed at shaping the whole human person, conceived of as a unity of mind, body, and spirit. I examined the place and function of Scripture and liturgy, the trivium, and patristic texts in shaping the mind, intellect, and outlook of monks. Attention was then paid to bodily practices, ascetic training, spiritual exercises, and ethical formation. Finally, particular attention was paid to writing and the use of texts and how they were used in conjunction with contemplative, spiritual exercises in order to aid the ascetic-mystical quests of monastics. I demonstrated how Anania and Grigor composed texts specifically for use in conjunction with ascetic exercises, a fundamental aspect of their own writing as well as monastic literature in general, which is sometimes overlooked in scholarship focused exclusively with philological or literary issues.

The fourth chapter considered the complex relationship of Anania with a heretical community known as the T'ondrakians, who have been the subject of much scholarship and debate but about whom little scholarly consensus has been reached in regard to some of the most fundamental questions relating to the community's origin, beliefs, etc. I presented a new approach to this topic, focusing on questions the sources allow us to answer — not what the T'ondrakians believed, who they were, etc. but how they were perceived by the Armenian polemicists who wrote against them. This was motivated in part by the perplexing situation that Anania both wrote a treatise against the heretical community and then later was himself denounced as a T'ondrakec' i. Anania is one of many ascetic and spiritual figures of the age who came under suspicion or were denounced as T'ondrakec' i by the catholicos and members of the ecclesiastical hierarchy. By a reexamination of the principal sources and by distinguishing two phases in the T'ondrakian controversy in the context of other controversies and crises that the church faced in this period, I demonstrated how the epithet “T'ondrakec' i” evolved over time to signify anyone that posed a challenge to the authority of the ecclesiastical hierarchy and threatened its position as sole mediator between the divine and human realms, manifested in the church's liturgical services and ceremonies. In the turmoil of the tenth century, I argued that ascetic, monastic vardapets like Anania and reforming, spiritualist bishops such as Xosrov Anjewac'i and Yakobos of Hark' were denounced as "T'ondrakec'i" because they were perceived as a threat to the catholicos and to ecclesiastical and societal order and authority in general. The focus on interior spirituality and the inward path to the divine pursued at monasteries like Narek was perceived as a threat to the authority of the church hierarchy, manifested in the external rituals of the liturgy. These conflicts also provided a nuanced background to the pronounced focus on praising the church, its liturgical rites and ritual objects, which is found throughout the works of both Anania and Grigor. Such preoccupations of the Narekian writers were motivated in part by their desire to demonstrate and textually perform their loyalty to the church and their orthodox belief.

The fifth chapter focused on the response of the leading vardapets under Catholics Xac'ik Aršaruni to the tense ecclesiastical situation between Chalcedonian and non-Chalcedonian confessional communities, which emerged in the second half of the tenth century near the height of the Byzantine eastwards expansion. First, the chapter explained how ecclesiastical initiatives from the patriarch of Constantinople towards the Christian communities in the Caucasus were guided not to much by a desire for theological accord per se, but by the dictates of Constantinopolitan foreign policy, functioning as an important branch of imperial diplomacy. It then reviewed the beginnings of anti-Chalcedonianism in the catholicosal tenure of Anania Mokac'i and the way in which pro-Chalcedonianism was intermingled with political and secessionist trends in Caucasian Albania and Siwnik'. The height of Chalcedonian and non-Chalcedonian conflict came in the second half of the tenth century during the Byzantine Empire's expansion into the territory of Greater Armenia. I examined some of the diverse Armenian responses to this dynamic political and ecclesiastical landscape, before narrowing in on the situation in Cappadocia and Sebasteia and the role of Anania and the leading vardapets in protecting their flock from the Byzantine policy of integration and assimilation. Under Catholicos Xaç'ik, Anania and the leading vardapets led initiatives both on the ground and with their pens to counteract the Byzantine agenda. They advanced a policy of rebaptizing Armenians baptized Chalcedonian who had returned to their churches, a response to the Byzantine policy of integration and assimilation of Armenians via rebaptism. Secondly, they saw to the formation of episcopal sees in imperial territory to serve the large number of Armenian immigrants relocating into the eastern themes of the Byzantine Empire. Finally, Anania and his fellow vardapets crafted a powerful literary defense to polemical letters sent by eastern imperial hierarchs that challenged the Armenian church's right to autocephaly and self-determination. Through a reading of three central works of the period that responded to the Byzantine polemicists — Anania's Root of Faith, the "Letter to the Metropolitan of Melitenē" by Samuēl Kamrĵajorec 'i, and Catholicos Xaç'ik's "Reply to the Letter of the Metropolitan of Sebasteia" (composed by the vardapets) — I reconstructed the way in which the Armenians presented themselves as preservers of the authentic faith of early Christianity, who held to the faith of the early fathers and councils, from which, they claimed, the imperial church had departed. In opposition to the picture painted by the Byzantine polemicists of an Armenian Church that was a small, isolated, and insignificant heretical community, I reconstructed the vardapets' universal and global vision of Christianity, as they presented their own church as one among many, in universal consensus and communion with other Christian communities living outside of the Byzantine Empire in Egypt, Ethiopia, the Middle East, the Caucasus, India, and China.

APPENDIX A: LIFE OF ANANIA FROM A YAYSMAWURK' (SYNTAXARION)¹

[181v] [Մ]ահամի իր [28] եւ Նոյեմբերի զ [6]: Վերադարձումն նշխարաց ս[ր]բ[ո]յն Պօղոսի խոստովանողին ի Կոստանդինու պօլիս. եւ հանգիստ ս[ր]բ[ո]յն Յոհաննու սիւնեաց եպիսկոպոսին: եւ Անանեայ նարեկացւոյն:

...

[183r] [Ի] սմին աւուր եւս հանգիստ ս[ր]բ[ո]յն անանեայ վարժապետի նարեկացւոյն: Սա ի մանկութեանէ առեալ զլուծ կրօնաւորական կարգի, եւ բազում առաքինաջան երկոց զանձն տրւեալ. վարժեալ եղեւ յաստուածային գրոցն գիտութե[ան]ց: Եւ առաւել եւս հմուտ լեալ փիլիսոփայական արհեստից, մինչ զի յամ[ենայն] տեղիս տարածեալ հռչակեցաւ անհաս ոգե[ւորութիւն] գիտութե[ան] նորին՝ եւ ի թագաւորութե[ան] Հայոց բարեպաշտին աբասայ բագրատունւոյն յերկրէն ուշտունեաց. իբրեւ շինեցաւ մեծահռչակ վանսն² որ կոչի նարեկ: Եւ ի ժողովիլ բազմաց միանձանց. ի վանսն հարկեալ զնա կացուցին առաջնորդ ս[ուր]բ ուխտին կարկաւորել զեղբարսն ըստ գիտութե[ան] եւ ըստ խոհեմութե[ան] իւրոյ: Եւ նա մեծաւ հոգաբարձութեամբ հաստատեաց ի ս[ուր]բ ուխտն զսահման առաջնոց սրբոց հարցն ըստ կանոնադրութե[ան] ս[ր]բ[ո]յն բարսեղի կեսարացւոյն: Յաւել եւս ելից զտեղին գիտնական արամբք եւ քաղցրանուագ երգեցողովք եւ բարեգարդ կարգադրութեամբ կալ միշտ յընթեր[183v]ցումն ս[ուր]բ գրոց: Եւ ըստ վարուցն մաքրութե[ան] կրօնիցն գովելոյ հոգիազարդ փիլիսոփայութեամբ եւ զբազումս եհան ի հրահանգս իմաստից գիտութե[ան]: Եւ ի ժամանակին յայնմիկ յերեւիլ հերձուածոյն Թոնդրակացւոց շարադրեաց գիրս ընդ դէմ անիծելոյն սմբատայ եւ այլոց հերձուածոց հարուստ բանիւք: Եւ ի սորին վանիցն՝ ելին արք իմաստունք եւ կատարեալք, յորոց մի էր եւ ս[ուր]բն գրիգոր նարեկացին հերշտակն ի մարմնի, որդի դստեր եղբօր նորին: Եւ այնպէս երանելին անանեայ պաթառացեալ միշտ ի վարդապետութիւն[ւն] աստուածային գրոց, եւ հասեալ ի կատար կենացն՝ հանգեալ ի տ[է]ր, եւ եղաւ ի վանս իւր սաղմոսիւք եւ օրհնութեամբ ի փառս ք[րիստոս]ի պսակողին սրբոց:

¹ This is the only known life (vark') of Anania, found in a lone Synaxarion (Yaysmawurk') copied in 1719 in Isfahan (Խսպահան): M 7359, 181v–183v (life of Anania at 183r–183v). The scribe and decorator was Awetis k'ahanay. It is written in very clear bolorgir, with marginal decorations and illuminations. The illuminations/decorations, however, are not completed. They are in outline (in reddish stencil), with decorative capital letters either absent or likewise in stencilled outline. A miniature of Anania with two other figures in the margin of his life appears on f. 183r. Behind him stands his companion vardapet Petros, renowned Scriptural exegete, with a manuscript held open in his hands. Anania is receiving the keys to Narek monastery from a figure, presumably the Arcruni dynast who funded the building of the monastery (King Gagik?). For a color reproduction of the illumination, see T'amrazyan, Grigor Narekats' in ev Narekyan dprots' ě, vol. 2 (between pp. 152–53). On this source, see T'amrazyan, Grigor Narekats' in ev Narekyan dprots' ě, 2:125–27.

² Վանսն. Grammatically incorrect. It is possible the original form was վանս, with the -ս deictic suffix signifying 'this monastery,' and the -ն otiose, added by a later scribe. This would imply that the provenance of the life is connected with Narekavank'.

Sahmi³ 28 and November 6. Return of the relics of Saint Paul the Confessor⁴ to Constantinople and repose of Saints Yovhannēs of Siwnik⁵ and Anania of Narek...

On this same day also [is] the repose of S. Anania, master teacher⁶ of Narek. From childhood he took upon himself the yoke of the celibate monastic order,⁷ giving himself over to many ascetic labors of virtuous striving and becoming trained in scholarly approaches to divine Scripture. He became so learned in the philosophical arts⁸ that the unattainable spirituality of his knowledge was proclaimed abroad in every place, from the land of R̥štunik⁹ where the very renowned monastery called Narek was built even into the kingdom of Armenia of the pious Abas Bagratuni (r. 929 – 953). And when many monks had gathered into the monastery, then they compelled him and appointed him as abbot⁹ of the holy congregation to regulate the brothers according to his knowledge and prudence. And with great guardianship he established for the holy congregation the regulation of the first holy fathers according to the rule of S. Basil of Caesarea.¹⁰ Furthermore, he filled the place with scholarly men and sweetly harmonious singers with well-adorned ordinances¹¹ to remain always in the reading of Holy Scripture. And pursuing the praiseworthy purity of religious life together with spiritually adorned philosophy, he directed many in the training of scholarly wisdom. And at that time when the Tʻondrakite heresy appeared, he composed a book against the cursed Smbat¹² and other heresies with abundant arguments. And from the monastery of this same (abbot), there arose wise and perfect men, one of whom also was S. Grigor of Narek, the angel in the body, his niece’s son. And thus the blessed Anania, always radiant in the teaching of divine Scripture, having advanced to the end of his life, took his rest in the Lord, and was placed in his monastery to the accompaniment of Psalms and canticles and to the glory of Christ who crowns the saints.

³ [U]աՀմի. Third month in the native Armenian calendar. See Abrahamyan, Hayots’ gir ew grch’ut’yun, 100.

⁴ Paul I (ca. 300 – ca. 351), bishop of Constantinople (ca. 337–39, 341–342, 346–51). Elected and deposed multiple times during Nicene-Arian conflicts of the middle fourth century. Exiled several times, finally to Cucusus (Koukousos) in Cappadocia, where he was starved and then strangled to death by Arian sympathizers. His remains were transferred to Constantinople by order of Emperor Theodosius I in 381. See ODB, s.v. “Paul I.”

⁵ Catholicos Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc’i (sed. 898–924).

⁶ վարժապետ. In the early modern period, վարժապետ is sometimes used in place of վարդապետ. This does not necessarily imply, however, that the life as a whole issues from this late period.

⁷ կրօնաւորական կարգի. Literally ‘religious order.’ կրօնաւորական, ‘religious’ is often used in distinction to ‘married’ (ամուսնացեալ) life, hence ‘celibate.’

⁸ փիլիսոփայական արհեստից. Արհեստ (or արուեստ) is the Armenian equivalent of Gk. τέχνη or Lat. ars. Here, the reference is to the academic disciplines of the liberal arts, in particular the trivium. On the trivium in the Armenian monastic setting, see chapter 3.

⁹ առաջնորդ. Literally, ‘leader,’ a common way of referring to the position of abbot.

¹⁰ ըստ կանոնադրուած[ան] ս[ր]բ[ո]յն բարսեղի կեսարացւոյն. A reference to the Book of Questioners (Գիրք հարցողաց). On this book, and its use in medieval Armenian monasteries, see the beginning of chapter 3.

¹¹ բարեգարդ կարգադրուած[եա]մբ. This refers to how the monastic day was structured, how the monks would spend their time. As there are no extant typika in the Armenian tradition (see the beginning of chapter 3), the daily schedule was presumably communicated orally and at the discretion of Anania in his role as abbot.

¹² Smbat of Zarehawan (fl. mid-9th c.), remembered in Armenian sources as the founder of the Tʻondrakite heresy. See Garsoïan, Paulician Heresy, 140–43 and chapter 4 of this study.

APPENDIX B: REIGNS OF DYNASTS AND CATHOLICOI

BAGRATUNI¹

Ašot I “the Great” (sparapet, 855 – 862; prince of princes, 862 – 884; king, 884 – 890)²
Smbat I “the Martyr” (890 – 914)³
Ašot II Erkat “the Iron (King)” (914 – 928/29)⁴
Abas I (929 – 953)⁵
Ašot III Olormac “The Merciful” (953 – 977)⁶
Smbat II Tiezerakal “Master of the Universe” (977 – 989)⁷
Gagik I “the Great” (989/90 – 1017/20)⁸
Yovhannēs-Smbat III (ca. 1017 – 1041)⁹
Ashot IV “the Brave” (ca. 1017 – 1040)¹⁰
Gagik II (ca. 1041 – 1044)¹¹

ARCRUNI (VASPURAKAN)

Ašot I ‘the Senior’ (grandfather of Gagik; 836 – 852, 868 – 874)
Gurgēn (852 – 855)
(Grigor-)Derenik (857 – 868, 874 – 887, son of Ašot I, father of Gagik; married Sop‘i, father of Ašot II ‘the Junior’, Gagik, and Gurgēn)
Ašot II ‘the Junior’ (887 – 903/4 ‘ brother of Gagik)
Gagik I Arcruni (prince, 903/4 – 908; king 908 – ca. 943/4)¹²
Derenik-Ašot (ca. 943 – 953/8)¹³
Apusahl Hamazasp (953/8 – 972)¹⁴
Ašot-Sahak (972 – 983)¹⁵
Gurgēn-Xač‘ik (972 – 1003)¹⁶
Senek‘erim-Yovhannēs (972 – 1021)¹⁷

¹ For other rulers and patriarchs in the era, see the tables and charts in CHBE, 906–929.

² Greenwood, “Patterns of Contact and Communication,” 79.

³ Greenwood, “Patterns of Contact and Communication,” 79.

⁴ Greenwood, “Patterns of Contact and Communication,” 81.

⁵ Greenwood, Universal History, 224 n. 91.

⁶ Greenwood, “Patterns of Contact and Communication,” 94.

⁷ T‘amrazyan, Grigor Narekats‘in ev Narekyan dprots‘ē, 2:130.

⁸ Garsoĭan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 163.

⁹ “Genealogical Tables and Lists of Rulers” in CHBE, 918.

¹⁰ “Genealogical Tables and Lists of Rulers” in CHBE, 918.

¹¹ “Genealogical Tables and Lists of Rulers” in CHBE, 918.

¹² Garsoĭan, “Independent Kingdoms,” 158.

¹³ “Genealogical Tables and Lists of Rulers” in CHBE, 918.

¹⁴ “Genealogical Tables and Lists of Rulers” in CHBE, 918.

¹⁵ “Genealogical Tables and Lists of Rulers” in CHBE, 918.

¹⁶ “Genealogical Tables and Lists of Rulers” in CHBE, 918.

¹⁷ “Genealogical Tables and Lists of Rulers” in CHBE, 918.

CATHOLICOI

Dawit' II Kakałec'i (ca. 806 – 833)¹⁸
Yovhannēs IV (ca. 833–855)¹⁹
Zak'aria Jagec'i (855 – 877)²⁰
Gēorg II Gañec'i (877 – 897)
Maštoc' (897 – 898)
Yovhannēs Draxanakerc'i "the Historian" (898 – 924)²¹
Step'anos II Rštuni (ca. 925)²²
T'ēodoros I Rštuni (925 – 934/5)²³
Elišē Rštuni (934/5 – 941/2 = AE 383 – 390)²⁴
Anania Mokac'i (941/2 – ca. 963/4 or 965/6 = AE 390 – 414)²⁵
Vahan I Siwnec'i (ca. 965/6 – 970)²⁶
Step'anos III Sewanc'i (ca. 970 – 972/3)²⁷
Xač'ik I Aršaruni (972/3 – 990/1)²⁸
Sargis I Sewanc'i (992/3²⁹ – 1019)
Petros I Getadarj (1019 – 1058)

SEE OF CATHOLICATE³⁰

Vałaršapat (ca. 314 – 484)
Duin (484 – end of ninth c.)
Ałt'amar (ca. 923 – ca. 948)
Argina (ca. 950 – 992)
Ani (992 – 1046)

¹⁸ Greenwood, Universal History, 173 n. 242.

¹⁹ Greenwood, Universal History, 173 n. 243.

²⁰ Greenwood, Universal History, 176 n. 259.

²¹ Garsoian, "Independent Kingdoms," 172.

²² Greenwood, Universal History, 222 n. 89.

²³ Greenwood, Universal History, 222 n. 89.

²⁴ Greenwood, Universal History, 222 n. 91.

²⁵ Greenwood, Universal History, 222 n. 91 and 92, 232 n. 155.

²⁶ Greenwood, Universal History, 233 n. 157.

²⁷ Greenwood, Universal History, 233 n. 163.

²⁸ Greenwood, Universal History, 4.

²⁹ Greenwood, Universal History, 295, n. 522.

³⁰ Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 30 n. 121; idem, «L'église arménienne,» 503–04.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ABBREVIATIONS

cpg = Maurice Geerard, ed. Clavis patrum graecorum: qua optima quaeque scriptorum patrum graecorum recensiones a primaevis saeculis usque ad octavum commode recluduntur, Turnhout: Brepols, 1974–2003.

CHBE = The Cambridge History of the Byzantine Empire c.500–1492. Edited by Jonathan Shepard, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2009.

CSCO = Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum Orientalium

El₂ = Encyclopedia of Islam, Second Edition. Edited by P. Bearman, Th. Bianquis, C.E. Bosworth, E. van Donzel and W.P. Heinrichs. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1960–2005.
<https://referenceworks.brillonline.com/browse/encyclopaedia-of-islam-2>

El₃ = Encyclopedia of Islam, Three. Edited by Kate Fleet, Gudrun Krämer, Denis Matringe, John Nawas and Everett Rowson with a team of more than 20 section editors. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2007–. <https://referenceworks.brillonline.com/browse/encyclopaedia-of-islam-3>

Elr = Encyclopædia Iranica, online edition, New York, 1996–. <http://www.iranicaonline.org/>

HHSHTB = Hakobyan, T‘adevos Khach‘aturi, Step‘an Tigrani Melik‘-Bakhshyan, and Hovhannes Khach‘aturi Barseghian. Hayastani ev harakits‘ shrjanneri teghanunneri bararan. 5 vols. Erevan: Erevani Hamalsarani Hratarakch‘ut‘yun, 1988–2001.

JSAS = Journal of the Society for Armenian Studies

M = Matenadaran, Mashtots Institute of Ancient Manuscripts, Erevan, Armenia.

MH = Matenagirk‘ Hayots‘ [= Armenian Classical Authors]. Antelias/Erevan, 2003–.

NBHL = Nor bargirk‘ haygazean lezui, 2 vols. Edited by Gabriël Awedik‘ean, Khach‘atur Siwrmëlean, and Mkrtich‘ Awgorean. Venice: St. Lazarus Press, 1836–37.

OCD = The Oxford Classical Dictionary. Edited by Simon Hornblower, Antony Spawforth, and Esther Eidinow. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012 (4th ed.).

ODB = The Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium. Edited by Alexander P. Kazhdan. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1991.

ODLA = The Oxford Dictionary of Late Antiquity. Edited by Oliver Nicholson. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2018.

P = Bibliothèque Nationale de France

REArm = Revue des études arméniennes

SC = Sources Chrétiennes

TM = Travaux et Mémoires. Centre de recherche d'histoire et Civilisation de Byzance. Paris: Éditions E. de Boccard. 1965–.

Arabic

Ibn Khaldūn (Abū Zayd ‘Abd al-Raḥmān Ibn Khaldūn). Muqaddima. Translated by Franz Rosenthal. 3 vols. Bollingen Series XLIII. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1958.

Armenian

Aelius Theon. Progymnasmata. In T’ēovnay Yaghags chartasanakan krt’ut’eants’ handerdz yoyñ bnagrov (Թւովնայ յաղագս քարտասանական կրթութեանց հանդերձ յոյն բնագրով). Edited by Hakob Manandyan. Erevan: Institute of History and Literature, 1938.

Anania of Mokka’ (Mokac’i). Complete Works. MH 10: 245–91.

_____. “Concerning the Rebellion of the House of the Albanians, Whose Ordination for Years Was outside of the Throne of the Holy Illuminator [Յաղագս ապստամբութեան տանն Աղուանից որ ընդ ժամանակս լեալ իցէ ձեռնադրութիւնն արտաքոյ սուրբ Լուսաւորչի աթոռոյն].” MH 10:255–74. Armenian text and French translation by Patricia Boisson in Mélanges Jean Pierre-Mahé, edited by Patricia Boisson, Aram Mardirossian, Agnès Ouzounian, and Constnatine Zuckerman. TM 18 (2014): 786–829.

_____. “The Reason for Anathematizing Xosrov, Bishop of Anjewac’ik’, by the Lord Anania, Catholicos of Armenia [Տեառն Անանիայի Հայոց Կաթողիկոսի պատճառ յաղագս զԽոսրով նզովելոյն զԱնձեւացւոյ եպիսկոպոսն].” MH 10:275–76. Translated by S. Peter Cowe in Xosrov Anjewac’i, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy, 10–13.

Anania of Narek. Book of Instruction (Խրատագիրք). MH 10:328–427.

“To Priests” (Խրատ քահանայից). MH 10:328–336.

“On Patience and Peace” (Խրատ վասն համբերութեան եւ խաղաղութեան). MH 10:337–341.

“On Humility” (Խրատ վասն խոնարհութեան). MH 10:342–46.

“Counsel on Prayer” (Բանք աղաւթից). MH 10:348–355.

“On this Transitory World” (Վասն անցաւոր աշխարհիս). MH 10:348–355.

“On Attention to Thoughts” (Յաղագս խորհրդոց զգուշութեան). MH 10:356–359.

“On Compunction and Tears” (Յաղագս զղջման եւ արտասուաց). MH 10:360–395.

“Evangelical, Apostolic, and Prophetic Speech and Instructions Which Lead Us to Eternal Life and Do Not Lead Us Astray to the Right or to the Left” (Խաւսք եւ խրատք աւետարանական, առաքելական եւ մարգարէական, որ տանին զմեզ ի կեանսն յաւիտենական եւ ոչ տան խոտորել յաջ կամ յահեակ). MH 10:396–420.

“Recapitulated and Condensed Sentences on the Things Said to You Before” (Գլխաւորեալ եւ համառաւտ բանք վասն յառաջ ասացելոցդ). MH 10:421–427.

- _____. Refutation of the T'ondrakians (Հակահատուքիւն ընդդէմ Թոնդրակեցւոց), fragment. MH 10:436–38. French translation in Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 783–86.
- _____. For an Explanation of Numbers (Սակս բացայայտութեան թուոց). MH 10:440–455.
- _____. Encomium on the Holy Universal Church (Ներբողեան ասացեալ ի սուրբն կաթողիկէ եկեղեցի). MH 10:619–646. Previously published in Girk' or koch' i zhoghovatsu, Constantinople, 1747, 441–83; Girk' koch' ets' eal zhoghovatsu, Constantinople, 1793, 403–42.
- _____. Root of Faith (Հաւատարմարտ). MH 10:480–598.
- _____. “Letter of Confession” (Գիր խոստովանութեան). MH 10:649–57.
- Anonymous [Grammarians]. Commentary on the Ars Grammatica of Dionysius Thrax (Անանուն մեկնիչ քերականին). MH 5:1219–38.
- Aristakēs Lastivertc'i. History (Պատմութիւն). MH 16:526–633.
- Basil of Caesarea. Book of Questioners (Գիրք հարցողաց). Armenian text and Italian translation: Gabriele Uluhogian, ed. and trans. Basilio di Cesarea, Il Libro delle Domande (Le Regole). CSCO 536–537, Scriptores Armeniaci t. 19–20. Louvain: Peeters, 1993.
- Book of Canons* (Կանոնագիրք Հայոց). 2 vols. Edited by Vazgen Hakobyan. Erevan, 1964–1971.
- Book of Chreia* (Գիրք պիտոյից). Edited by Gohar Muradyan. Erevan: Hayastani GAA hratarakch'ut'yun, 1993.
- Book of Letters–1* (Գիրք Թղթոց). Edited by Yovsep' Izmirean. Tiflis, 1901.
- Book of Letters–2* (Գիրք Թղթոց). Edited by Norayr Pogharean. Jerusalem: Sts. James Press, 1994.
- Davit' [the Grammarian]. Commentary on the Ars Grammatica of Dionysius Thrax (Մեկնութիւն քերականին). MH 5:1167–87.
- David the Invincible (Dawit' Anyalt'). Definitions and Divisions of Philosophy (Սահմանիք Իմաստասիրութեան). Edited by S. S. Arevšatyan. Erevan, 1960. English translation with introduction and notes by Bridget Kendall and Robert W. Thomson. Armenian Texts and Studies 5. Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1983.

- _____. Commentary on Porphyry's Isagogē (Վերլուծութիւն Ներածութեանն Պորփիրի). Edited by S. S. Arevšatyan. Erevan, 1976. Old Armenian Text with the Greek Original, and English Translation, Introduction and Notes by Gohar Muradyan. Commentaria in Aristotelem Armeniaca – Davidis Opera vol. 3. Philosophia Antiqua: A Series of Studies on Ancient Philosophy 137. Leiden: Brill, 2014.
- _____. Interpretation of Aristotle's Categories (Մեկնութիւն Ստորոգութեանց Արիստոտէլի). Edited by Hakob Manandyan. St. Petersburg, 1911.
- _____. Interpretation of Aristotle's Prior Analytics (Մեկնութիւն ի Վերլուծականն Արիստոտէլի). Edited by S. S. Arevšatyan. Erevan, 1967. Old Armenian Text with an English Translation, Introduction and Notes by Aram Topchyan. Commentaria in Aristotelem Armeniaca – Davidis Opera vol. 2. Philosophia Antiqua: A Series of Studies on Ancient Philosophy 122. Leiden: Brill, 2010.
- Elišē. History of Vardan and the Armenian War (Վասն Վարդանայ եւ Հայոց պատերազմին). MH 1:515–765. English translation by Robert W. Thomson. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1982.
- Ephrem the Syrian. Srboyn Ep' remi matenagrut' iwnk' (Սրբոյն Եփրեմի մատենագրութիւնք). Venice: St. Lazarus Press, 1836.
- Evagrius of Pontus. Life and Literary Works: Translated from Greek to Armenian in the Fifth Century [Վարք եւ մատենագրութիւնք. թարգմանեալք ի յունէ ի հայ բարբառ ի հինգերորդ դարու]. Edited by Barsegh Sargisean. Venice: St. Lazarus Press, 1907.
- Epic Histories* (Բուզանդարան պատմութիւնք). Armenian text in MH 1:277–428. Translated by Nina G. Garsoïan as The Epic Histories Attributed to P'awstos Buzand (Buzandaran Patmut' iwnk'). Harvard Armenian Texts and Studies 8. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1989.
- Grigor Magistros. Letters-I [Թղթերը]. Edited by K. Kostaneanc'. Alexandrapol, 1910.
- _____. Letters-II [Թղթերը]. MH 16:190–385.
- Grigor of Narek. Complete Works. MH 10:1015–1110. MH 12.
- _____. Book of Lamentation (Մատեան ողբերգութեան). P.M. Khach'atryan and A.A. Ghazinyan, eds. Matean Oghbergut' ean. Erevan, 1985. French translation (1): Grégoire de Narek, Le livre de prières. Translated by Isaac Kéchichian. SC 78. Paris, 1961. French translation (2): Mahé, Annie et Jean-Pierre. Grégoire de Narek. Tragédie. Matean olbergut' ean. Le Livre de Lamentation. Introduction, Traduction et Notes. CSCO 584, subsidia 106. Louvain: Peeters, 2000. English translation: Speaking with God from the Depths of the Heart: The Armenian Prayer Book of St. Gregory of Narek. Translated by Thomas Samuelian. Erevan, 2001.

_____. “Letter to Kčaw Monastery (Թուղթ ի հոյակապ եւ յականաւոր ուխտն Կճաւայ).” MH 12:1087–89. French Translation in Mahé, Grégoire de Narek, Tragédie, 787–92. English translation in Conybeare, Key of Truth, 125–30; Arpee, History of Armenian Christianity, 319–24.

Hamam Arewelc‘i. Commentary on the Ars Grammatica of Dionysius Thrax (Մեկնութիւն Բերականիւն). MH 9:534–54.

Homiliary (Ճառքնոց). P 120, ff. 3v–8r.

Kirakos Ganjakec‘i. History of Armenia (Պատմութիւն Հայոց). Edited by K. A. Melik‘ - Ōhanjanyan. Erevan, 1961.

Koriwn. Life of Maštoc‘. MH 1:227–72. English translation by Bedros Norehad. New York: Armenian General Benevolent Union, 1964. Reprinted in Krikor H. Maksoudian, Koriwn, Vark‘ Mashtots‘i: a Photoreproduction of the 1941 Yerevan Edition with a Modern Translation and Concordance, and with a New Introduction. Delmar, NY: Caravan Books, 1985. Also reprinted in Agop J. Hacikyan, ed. The Heritage of Armenian Literature, vol. 1, 152–81. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 2000. French translation: Mahé, Jean-Pierre. “La Vie de Maštoc‘, traduction annotée.” REArm 30 (2005–2007): 59–97. German translation: Gabriele Winkler. Koriwns Biographie des Mesrop Maštoc‘, Übersetzung und Kommentar. Orientalia Christiana Analecta 245. Rome: Pontificio Istituto Orientale, 1994.

Łazar P‘arpec‘i. History of Armenia (Պատմութիւն Հայոց). MH 2:2201–2375. English translation: The History of Łazar P‘arpec‘i. Translated by Robert W. Thomson. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1991.

Łewond. History. MH 6:711–851. English translation: Arzoumanian, Zaven. History of Ghevond the Eminent Vardapet of the Armenians (VIII Century). Burbank, 2007 [2nd ed.]. French translation: Martin-Hisard, Bernadette. Łewond Vardapet Discours Historique. Centre de Recherche d’Histoire et Civilisation de Byzance, Monographies 49. Paris: ACHCByz, 2015.

Matt‘ēos Ūrhayec‘i (Matthew of Edessa). Chronicle (Ժամանակագրութիւն). Edited by M. Adamean and N. Tēr-Mik‘ayean. Vałaršapat, 1898. English translation: Ara Edmond Dostourian, Armenia and the Crusades, Tenth to Twelfth Centuries: The Chronicle of Matthew of Edessa. Lanham, MD: 1993. Online critical edition and English translation (incomplete): Tara Andrews, Tatevik Atayan, and Anahit Safaryan. “The Chronicle of Matthew of Edessa Online”, last modified 29 August 2020. <https://editions.byzantini.st/ChronicleME/>

Movsēs Kałankaduac´i [Dasxuranc´i]. History of the Caucasian Albanians (Պատմութիւն Աղուանից աշխարհի). MH 15:27–437. English translation by C. J. F. Dowsett. The History of the Caucasian Albanians by Movsēs Dasxuranci. London Oriental Studies 8. London: Oxford University Press, 1961.

Movsēs K´ert´oł. Commentary on the Ars Grammatica of Dionysius Thrax (Մեկնութիւն Քերականի). MH 5:1195–1208.

Movsēs Xorenac´i. History of Armenia (Պատմութիւն Հայոց). MH 2:1737–2121. Translated by Robert W. Thomson. Ann Arbor, MI: Caravan Books, 2006 [2nd rev. ed.].

Nersēs Šnorhali. Encyclical Letters. (Ընդհանրական թուղթք սրբոյն Ներսէսի Շնորհալուոյ) Jerusalem: Sts. James Press, 1871.

Nonnus of Nisibis. Commentary on the Gospel of Saint John. Translation of the Armenian Text with Introduction and Commentary by Robert W. Thomson. Writings from the Islamic World 1. Atlanta: SBL Press, 2014.

Samuēl Kamrĵajorec´i. Explanation of Feasts [Տաւնապատճառ]. MH 10:703–46.

_____. “Letter of Samuēl Kamrĵajorec´i, Armenian Philosopher, Reply to the Letter of Theodore, Metropolitan of Melitenē, Written at the Command of Xač´ik, Catholicos of Armenia [Թուղթ Սամուէլի Կամրջաճորեցոյ Հայոց փիլիսոփայի, պատասխանի Թղթոյն Թէոդորոսի մետրոպոլիտի Մելիտինոյ, գրեալ Հրամանաւ Խաչկայ Հայոց Կաթողիկոսի].” MH 10:747–761; Book of Letters-1, 302–322; Book of Letters-2, 550–579.

Seal of Faith (Կնիք հաւատոյ). Tēr-Mkrтч´ean, Karapet, ed. Knik´ Hawatoy Ĕndhanur Surb Ekeghets´woy: hughghap´ar ew S. Hoge kir harts´n merots´ dawanut´eants´. Ĕjmiatsin, 1914.

Step´anos Ōrbelean. History of Siwnik´ (Պատմութիւն նահանգին Սիւական). Edited by Karapet Shahnazareants´. Tiflis: Aghaneants´, 1910.

Step´anos Siwnec´i. Commentary on the Daily Office (Ժամակարգութեան մեկնութիւն). In The Commentary on the Armenian Daily Office by Bishop Step´anos Siwnec´i (d. 735). Critical Edition and Translation with Textual and Liturgical Analysis by Michael Daniel Findikyan. Orientalia Christiana Analecta 270. Roma: Pontificio Istituto Orientale, 2004.

_____. Commentary on the Ars Grammatica of Dionysius Thrax (Մեկնութիւն Քերականի). MH 6:571–93.

_____. On the Incorruptibility of the Body of Christ (Վասն անապականութեան մարմնոյն). MH 6:439–57.

Step'anos Tarōnec'i (Asolik). Universal History [Պատմութիւն տիեզերական]. MH 15:639–829. English translation: Timothy Greenwood. The Universal History of Step'anos Tarōnec'i: Introduction, Translation and Commentary. Oxford Studies in Byzantium. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2017. French translation: Frédéric Macler. Étienne Asolik de Taron. Histoire universelle. Paris, 1917.

Timothy Aelurus. Refutation of the Decrees of the Council of Chalcedon (Հակաճառութիւն ան սահմանեալսն ի ժողովոյն Քաղկեդոնի). Edited by Karapet Ter Mkrtchian and Eruand Ter Minasian. Eǰmiatsin, 1908.

T'ovma Arcruni [and Anonymous Continuator]. History of the House of the Arcrunik'. MH 11:15–316. English translation and commentary by Robert W. Thomson. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1985.

Uxtanēs of Sebasteia. History of Armenia (Պատմութիւն Հայոց): MH 15:441–616. English translation of Book I: Arzoumanian, Zaven. Bishop Ukhtanes of Sebastia, History of Armenia. Part I. History of the Patriarchs and Kings of Armenia. Fort Lauderdale, 1988. English translation of Book II: Arzoumanian, Zaven. Bishop Ukhtanes of Sebastia, History of Armenia. Part II. History of the Severance of the Georgians from the Armenians. Fort Lauderdale, 1985. French translation: Brosett, Marie-Félicité. Deux historiens arméniens. Kiracos de Gantzac, XIII^e s., Histoire d'Arménie, Oukhtanès d'Ourha, X^e s., Histoire en trois parties. Saint Petersburg, 1870.

Vardan Arewelc'i. Compilation of Armenian History [Հաւաքումն պատմութեան Հայոց]. Edited by Ghewond Alishan. Venice: Mkhit'arean Press, 1862. Translated by Robert Thomson in “The Historical Compilation of Vardan Arewelc'i.” Dumbarton Oaks Papers 43 (1989): 125–226.

Xaçik Aršaruni. “Reply to the Letter of the Metropolitan of Sebasteia, written at the command of Lord Xaç'ik, Catholicos of Armenia [Պատասխանի թղթոյն մետրոպոլիտին Սեբաստիոյ, գրեալ հրամանաւ Տեառն Խաչկայ Հայոց Կաթողիկոսի].” MH 15:770–800. English translation in Greenwood, Universal History, 253–283.

Xosrov Anjewac'i. Commentary on the Liturgy of the Hours (Մեկնութիւն գրոց ժամակարգութեան). Constantinople, 1730, 1840. MH 10:35–227.

_____. Commentary on the Divine Liturgy (Մեկնութիւն աղաթից պատարագին). Edited by Ghewond Alishan, Venice, 1869. English translation by S. Peter Cowe. Armenian Church Classics. New York: St. Vartan Press, 1991. Latin Translation by P. Vetter. Chosroae Magni Explicatio precum Missae. Fribourg im Breisgau, 1880.

_____. To Clerics (Առ վասն եկեղեցականսն): MH 10:228–34.

_____. Words of Useful Instruction (Բանք պիտանիք խրատականք): MH 10:235–44.

Yaysmawurk' (Յայսմաւուրք). M 7359.

Yovhannēs Drasxanakertc' i. History of Armenia. MH 11:315–584. English translation by Rev. Krikor H. Maksoudian. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1987. French translation: Boisson-Chenorhokian, P. Yovhannes Drasxanakertc' i. Histoire d'Arménie. CSCO 605, subsidia 115. Leuven: Peeters, 2003.

Yovhannēs Erznkac' i (Pluz). Compilation of Commentary on Grammar (Հաւաքուածք մեկնութեան քերականի). Armenian text and English translation in Roberta R. Ervine, “Yohannēs Erznkac' i Pluz's Compilation of Commentary on Grammar.” PhD diss., Columbia University, 1988.

[Pseudo-]Zeno. Anonymous Philosophical Treatise. Edited and translated by Michael E. Stone and Manea E. Shirinian. Philosophia Antiqua 83. Leiden: Brill, 2000.

Greek

Aelius Theon. Progymnasmata. Edited by Michel Patillon with the assistance of Giancarlo Bolognesi for the Armenian. Paris: Les Belles Lettres, 1997.

Aphthonius. Progymnasmata. In Corpus Rhetoricum, t. 1. Edited by Michel Patillon. Paris: Les Belles Lettres, 2008.

Constantine VII Porphyrogenitus. De administrando imperio. Edited by G. Moravcsik. Translated by R. J. H. Jenkins. Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae 1. Washington D.C.: Dumbarton Oaks, 1967, rev. ed.

_____. De cerimoniis aulae Byzantinae. Edited by J. J. Reiske. 2 vols. Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae. Bonn: Weber, 1829–1830. Incomplete edition, French translation and commentary by Albert Vogt, Constantin VII Porphyrogénète: Le Livre des cérémonies, 4 vols., Paris: Les belles lettres (1935–1940).

Evagrius of Pontus. Praktikos. Greek text and French translation in Traité pratique, ou, Le moine. Introduction, édition critique du texte grec (compte tenu des versions orientales), traduction, commentaire et tables par Antoine Guillaumont et Claire Guillaumont. SC 170–171. Paris : Éditions du Cerf, 1971.

- _____. Scholia on Proverbs. Greek text and French translation in Scholies aux Proverbes. Introduction, texte critique, traduction, notes, appendices et index par Paul Géhin. SC 340. Paris : Éditions du Cerf, 1987.
- _____. Gnostikos. Greek text and French translation in Le gnostique, ou, A celui qui est devenu digne de la science. Édition critique des fragments grecs, traduction intégrale établie au moyen des versions syriaques et arménienne, commentaire et tables par Antoine Guillaumont et Claire Guillaumont. SC 356. Paris : Éditions du Cerf, 1989.
- _____. Scholia on Ecclesiastes. Greek text and French translation in Scholies à l'Ecclésiaste. Édition princeps du texte grec, introduction, traduction, notes et index par Paul Géhin. SC 397. Paris : Éditions du Cerf, 1993.
- _____. The Greek Ascetic Corpus. Translation, Introduction, and Commentary by Robert E. Sinkewicz. Oxford Early Christian Studies. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2003.
- _____. Treatise to the Monk Eulogius and On the Vices Opposed to the Virtues. Greek text and French translation in À Euloge. Les vices opposés aux vertus. Introduction, texte critique, traduction et notes par Charles-Antoine Fogielman. SC 591. Paris : Éditions du Cerf, 2017.
- Nicholas Mystikos Letters. Edited by R. J. H. Jenkins and L. G. Westernink. Translated by R. J. H. Jenkins. Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae 6. Washington D.C.: Dumbarton Oaks, 1973.
- Symeon the Studite (Symeon Eulabes [the Pious]). Discours ascétique. Edited by Hilarion Alfeyev and translated by Louis Neyrand. SC 460. Paris, 2001.

Latin

Jerome. Epistles. Latin text and English translation (of certain epistles) in Select Letters, translated by F. A. Wright. Loeb Classical Library 262. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1933.

Syriac

Bar Hebraeus. Chronicon Syriacum. Edited by P. Bedjan, Paris: Maisonneuve, 1890.
Chronography. Translated from the Syriac by Ernest A. Wallis Budge. 2 vols. Oxford University Press, London: Humphrey Milford, 1932.

Evagrius of Pontus. Kephalaia Gnostika. Syriac text in Les six centuries des "Kephalaia gnostika" d'Évagre le Pontique. Édition critique de la version syriaque commune et édition d'une nouvelle version syriaque, intégrale, avec une double traduction française par Antoine Guillaumont. Patrologia Orientalis 28. Paris : Firmin-Didot, 1958.

_____. Euagrius Ponticus. Edited by W. Frankenberg. Abhandlungen der Königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen. Philologisch-Historische Klasse, n.F. 13, no. 2. Berlin: Weidmannsche Buchhandlung, 1912.

_____. Antirrhētikos. Translation in Talking Back: A Monastic Handbook for Combating Demons. Translated with an introduction by David Brakke. Cistercian Studies Series 229. Collegeville, Minn.: Cistercian Publications, 2009.

MODERN LITERATURE

- Abeghyan, Manuk. Hayots' hin grakanut'yan patmut'yun, 2 vols. Erevan: HSSR GA hratarakch'ut'yun, 1944–1946.
- Abrahamyan, Ashot G. Anania Shirakats'u matenagrut'yuně: usumnasirut'yun. Erevan: HSSR Matenadarani Hratarakch'ut'yun, 1944.
- _____. Hayots' gir ew grch'ut'yun. Erevan: Erevani hamalsarani hratarakch'ut'yun, 1973.
- Acharean, Hrach'eay. Hayerēn armatakan bařaran, 4 vols. Erevan: Erevani Hamalsarani Hratarakč'ut'iwn, 1971 (rev. ed).
- _____. Hayots' andznanunneri bařaran, 5 vols. Erevan: Petakan Hamalsarani Hratarakch'ut'yun, 1942–62.
- Adontz, Nicholas. Denys de Thrace et les commentateurs arméniens. Translated from Russian by René Hotterbeex. Louvain: Imp. Orientaliste, 1970.
- _____. Armenia in the Period of Justinian: The Political Conditions Based on the Naxarar System. Translated with Partial Revisions, a Bibliographical Note, and Appendices by Nina G. Garsořan. Lisbon: Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation, 1970.
- Akinean, N[ersēs] and P. Tēr-Pōghosean. “Matenagrakan hetazōtut'iwinner: Yunaban dprots'ě.” Handēs Amsōreay 111 (1977): 1–72.
- Alishan, Ghewond. Hayapatum: patmich'k' ew patmut'iwnc' hayots'. 3 vols. Venice: St. Lazarus Press, 1901.
- Anasyan, H. S. Haykakan matenagitut'yun E-ŽĚ dd. Vol. 1: A-Arak'el Salajorec'i. Erevan, 1959.
- Anser, M.K., Yousaf, Z., Nassani, A.A. et al. “Dynamic linkages between poverty, inequality, crime, and social expenditures in a panel of 16 countries: two-step GMM estimates.” Journal of Economic Structures 9, 43 (2020). <https://doi.org/10.1186/s40008-020-00220-6>
- Arevshatyan, A. S. «La proclamation mélodisée (K'aroz) dans le chant sacré arménien». REArm 24 (1993) 129–51.
- _____. «Ganj [Գանձ]». In K'ristonya Hayastan hanragitaran, edited by A. Łazaryan et al, 190–91. Erevan: Haykakan Hanragitarani Glxavor Xmbagrut'yun, 2002.

- Arlen, Jesse Siragan. “Texts for Keeping Watch: The Hymns of the Night of Ephrem of Nisibis and the Book of Lamentation of Gregory of Narek.” Viator: Medieval and Renaissance Studies 49 no. 2 (2018): 1–23.
- Arpee, Leon. A History of Armenian Christianity from the Beginning to Our Own Time. New York, 1946.
- Arutjunova-Fidanjan, V.A. “The Ethno-Confessional Self-Awareness of Armenian Chalcedonians.” REArm 21 (1988–1989): 345–63.
- Ashĕgean, Grigor. “Anania Narekats‘i.” Patker 19 nos. 8–11, 18 (1898–99): 175–79, 197–201, 217–21, 241–45, 426–28.
- Aslanian, Sebouh D. From the Indian Ocean to the Mediterranean: The Global Trade Networks of Armenian Merchants from New Julfa, Berkeley: University of California Press, 2011.
- _____. “The Marble of Armenian History: Or Armenian History as World History.” Études arméniennes contemporaines 4 (December 2014): 129–142.
- _____. “From ‘Autonomous’ to ‘Interactive’ Histories: World History’s Challenge to Armenian Studies.” In An Armenian Mediterranean: Words and Worlds in Motion, edited by Kathryn Babayan and Michael Pifer, 81–125. Mediterranean Perspectives. Palgrave Macmillan. Cham, Switzerland: Springer International, 2018.
- Augé, Isabelle. Églises en dialogue: Arméniens et Byzantins dans la seconde moitié du XII^e siècle. CSCO 633, subsidia 124. Louvain: Peeters, 2011.
- Auzépy, Marie-France. “State of Emergency (700–850).” In The Cambridge History of the Byzantine Empire c. 500 – 1492, edited by Jonathan Shepard, 251–91. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2008.
- Avdoyan, Levon. Pseudo-Yovhannēs Mamikonean: The History of Tarōn [Patmut‘iwn Tarōnoy]. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1993.
- Awgerean, Yarat‘iwn. A Brief Account of the Mechitaristic Society Founded on the Island of St. Lazaro. Translated by Alexander Goode. Venice: St. Lazarus Press, 1835.
- Ayuazean, Awedik‘ and Mser Msereants‘. “Anania Narekats‘i: Nerboghean asats‘eal i surbn kat‘oghikē ekeghets‘i.” Ch‘rak‘agh 1, nos. 8–12 (1859): 259–72, 291–98, 323–32, 359–66, 399–406.
- Bairoch, Paul. Cities and Economic Development: From the Dawn of History to the Present. Translated by Christopher Braider. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1988.

- Bang, Peter F. and Christopher A. Bayly, eds. Tributary Empires in Global History. Houndmills: Palgrave Macmillan, 2011.
- _____. “Tributary Empires — Towards a Global and Comparative History.” In Tributary Empires in Global History, edited by Peter F. Bang and Christopher A. Bayly, 1–17. Houndmills: Palgrave Macmillan, 2011.
- Bates, Michael L. “Dirham Mint of the Northern Provinces of the Umayyad Caliphate.” In Armenian Numismatic Journal 15: Essays Dedicated in Honor of Dr. Paul Z. Bedoukian On the Fortiety Year of His Contributions, edited by Y. T. Nercessian, 89–111. Los Angeles: Armenian Numismatic Society, 1989.
- _____. “A Second Muḥammadiyya and the Four Mints of the Bājunays Mine.” Journal of the Oriental Numismatic Society 209 (2011): 14–17.
- Beach, Alison I. and Isabelle Cochelin, eds. The New Cambridge History of Medieval Monasticism in the Latin West, 2 vols. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2020.
- Bentley, Jerry. “Introduction: The Task of World History.” The Oxford Handbook of World History, edited by Jerry Bentley, 1–18. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011.
- Blankinship, Khalid Y. The End of the Jihād State: The Reign of Hishām Ibn ‘Abd al-Malik and the Collapse of the Umayyads. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1994.
- Bobrovnikov, “Abrek.” *EI*₂.
- Boisson, Patricia, Aram Mardirossian, and Agnès Ouzounian. “Trois opuscules d’Anania Mokac‘i.” In Mélanges Jean Pierre-Mahé, edited by Patricia Boisson, Aram Mardirossian, Agnès Ouzounian, and Constnatine Zuckerman. TM 18 (2014): 771–841.
- Bonfiglio, Emilio and Johannes Preiser-Kapeller. “From Ararat to Mount Zion: Armenian Pilgrimage and Presence in the Holy Land, Fourth to Seventh Century.” In Pilgrimage to Jerusalem: Journeys, Destinations, Experiences across Times and Cultures, edited by Falko Daim, Johannes Pahlitzsch, Joseph Patrich, Claudia Rapp, and Jon Seligman, 75–85. Byzanz zwischen Orient und Okzident 19. Mainz: Verlag des Römisch-Germanischen Zentralmuseums, 2020.
- Bonner, Michael. “The waning of empire, 861–945.” In The Formation of the Islamic World Sixth to Eleventh Centuries, edited by Chase F. Robinson, 305–359. Vol. 1 of The New Cambridge History of Islam, edited by Michael Cook. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010.
- _____. “In Search of the Early Islamic Economy.” Al-‘Uṣūr al-Wuṣṭā 27 (2019): 1–39.

Borotov, P.N. “Köroghlu.” *EI*₂.

Bosker, Maarten, Eltjo Buringh, and Jan Luiten van Zanden. “From Baghdad to London: Unraveling Urban Development in Europe, the Middle East, and North Africa, 800–1800.” The Review of Economics and Statistics 95, no. 4 (2013): 1418–37.

Bosworth, Clifford E. “The Heritage of Rulership in Early Islamic Iran and the Search for Dynastic Connections to the Past.” Iran 11 (1973): 51–62.

_____. “The Tāhirids and Ṣaffāʿids.” In The Period from the Arab Invasion to the Saljuqs, edited by Richard N. Frye, 90–135. Vol. 4 of The Cambridge History of Iran. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1975.

_____. The New Islamic Dynasties: A Chronological and Genealogical Manual. The New Edinburgh Islamic Surveys. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 2004.

_____. “Saffarids.” EIr. <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/saffarids>. Accessed on 1 April 2020.

_____. “Šervānšahs.” EIr. <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/servansahs>. Accessed on 2 April 2020.

_____. “Rawwādids.” *EI*₂.

_____. “Sādjids.” *EI*₂.

_____. “Sāmānids.” *EI*₂.

_____. “Shaddādids.” *EI*₂.

_____. “Ziyārids.” *EI*₂.

Bosworth, C.E. and Latham, J.D. “Al-Thughūr.” *EI*₂.

Bozoyan, Azat. “L’Église et l’identité arménienne dans le Caucase et l’Empire byzantine aux IX^e-X^e siècles.” In L’Arménie et la Géorgie en dialogue avec l’Europe du Moyen Âge à nos jours, edited by Isabelle Augé, Vladimir Barkhoudaryan et al., 403–21. Paris: Geuthner, 2016.

Brown, Peter. “The Rise and Function of the Holy Man in Late Antiquity.” Journal of Roman Studies 61 (1971): 80–101.

Brubaker, Leslie. Inventing Byzantine Iconoclasm. London: Bristol Classical Press, 2012.

- Brubaker, Leslie and John Haldon. Byzantium in the Iconoclast Era c. 680–850: A History. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2011.
- Cahen, Cl. “Buwayhids or Būyids.” *EI*₂.
- Calzolari, Valentina. “The Editing of Christian Apocrypha in Armenian: Should We Turn Over a New Leaf?” In Armenian Philology in the Modern Era, edited by Valentina Calzolari and Michael E. Stone, 264–291. Leiden: Brill, 2014.
- _____. “Sciences sacrées et sciences profanes dans la littérature arménienne. Les racines culturelles de l’Arménie ancienne et médiévale entre Orient et Occident.” In M. Delgado, Ch. Mela, and F. Möri, eds. Orient-Occident. Racines spirituelles de l’Europe. Racines spirituelles de l’Europe. Enjeux et implications de la translatio studiorum dans le judaïsme, le christianisme et l’islam de l’Antiquité à la Renaissance (Actes du colloque scientifique international 16-19 novembre 2009), 369–395. Paris: Cerf, 2015.
- _____. “The Transmission and Reception of the Greek Cultural Heritage in Late Antique Armenia : The Armenian Translations of the Greek Neoplatonic Works.” In Greek Texts and Armenian Traditions: An Interdisciplinary Approach, edited by Francesca Gazzano, Lara Pagani, and Giusto Traina, 47–70. Trends in Classics-Supplementary 39. Berlin/Boston: De Gruyter, 2016.
- Calzolari, Valentina et Jonathan Barnes, eds. L’œuvre de David l’Invincible et la transmission de la pensée grecque dans la tradition arménienne et syriaque. Commentaria in Aristotelem Armeniaca – Davidis Opera vol. 1. Philosophia Antiqua : A Series of Studies on Ancient Philosophy 116. Brill: Leiden, 2009.
- Canard, M., Cahen, Cl., and Deny, J. “Armīniya.” *EI*₂.
- Canard, M., “‘Īsā b. al-Shaykh.” *EI*₂.
- Ch’amch’ean, Mik’ayēl. Patmut’ iwn Hayots’. 3 vols. Venice: St. Lazarus Press, 1784–1786.
- Charanis, Peter. “The Transfer of Population as a Policy in the Byzantine Empire.” Comparative Studies in Society and History 3 no. 2 (1961): 140–54.
- _____. Armenians in the Byzantine Empire. Lisbon: Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation, 1963.
- Conrad, Sebastian. What is Global History? Princeton: Princeton University Press, 2016.
- Contin, Benedetta. David l’Arménien et l’école d’Alexandrie. Orientalia Christiana Analecta 301. Roma: Pontificio Istituto orientale, 2017.

- Conybeare, Fred C. The Key of Truth: A Manual of the Paulician Church of Armenia. Oxford, 1898.
- Cowe, S. Peter. "A Typology of Armenian Biblical Manuscripts." REArm 18 (1984): 49–67.
- _____. Review of The Tondrakian Movement: Religious Movements in the Armenian Church from the Fourth to the Tenth Centuries, by Vrej Nersessian. Journal of Theological Studies 40, no. 2 (1989): 636–41.
- _____. Xosrov Anjewac'i, Commentary on the Divine Liturgy. Armenian Church Classics. New York: St. Vartan Press, 1991.
- _____. "An Armenian Job Fragment from Sinai and its Implications." Oriens Christianus 76 (1992): 123–57.
- _____. "The Impact of Time and Place on Grigor Narekac'i's Theology, Spirituality and Poetics." Le Muséon 108, nos. 1–2 (1995): 85–102.
- _____. Review of Book of Chries (Girk' Pitoyic'), by Gohar Muradyan. Le Muséon 108 nos. 1–2 (1995): 200–05.
- _____. "Generic and Methodological Developments in Theology in Caucasia from the Fourth to Eleventh Centuries within an East Christian Context." In Il Caucaso: Cerniera fra culture dal Mediterraneo alla Persia (secoli IV–XI), 20–26 aprile 1995, 647–83. Settimane di studio del centro italiano di studi sull'alto medioevo XLIII. 2 vols. Spoleto: Presso la sede del centro, 1996.
- _____. "Medieval Armenian Literary and Cultural Trends (Twelfth–Seventeenth Centuries)." In The Armenian People From Ancient to Modern Times, edited by Richard Hovannisian, 1:293–325. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1997.
- _____. "The Tome of Leo: Eastern and Oriental Orthodox Perspectives." St. Nersess Theological Review 3 nos. 1–2 (1998): 1–21.
- _____. "Relations Between the Kingdoms of Vaspurakan and Ani." In Armenian Van/Vaspurakan, edited by Richard G. Hovannisian, 73–85. Historic Armenian Cities and Provinces 1. Costa Mesa, CA: Mazda Publishers, 2000.
- _____. "Armenian Immigration to the Sebastia Region, Tenth–Eleventh Centuries." In Armenian Sebastia/Sivas and Lesser Armenia, edited by Richard G. Hovannisian, 111–35. Historic Armenian Cities and Provinces 5. Costa Mesa, CA: Mazda Publishers, 2004.

- _____. “Armenians in the Era of the Crusades, 1050–1350.” In The Cambridge History of Christianity. Vol. 5: Eastern Christianity, edited by Michael Angold, 404–429. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2006.
- _____. “The Bible in Armenian.” In The New Cambridge History of the Bible, edited by Richard Marsden and E. Ann Matter, 2:143–161. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2012.
- _____. “Two Tales of a City: Ani in Material Culture and the Armenian Literary Tradition.” In Ani at the Crossroads, edited by Zaza Shkirtladze, 81–119. Tbilisi: Ivane Javakhishvili Tbilisi State University Press, 2019.
- _____. “The Renewal of the Debate between Royal and Monastic Ideology under Gagik I of Vaspurakan as a Factor of Commercial and Economic Revival.” In Armenia Between Byzantium and the Orient: Celebrating the Memory of Karen Yuzbashian (1927–2009), edited by Bernard Outtier, Cornelia B. Horn, et al., 242–58. Texts and Studies in Eastern Christianity 16. Leiden: Brill, 2020.
- Cowe, S. Peter, ed. Ani: World Architectural Heritage of a Medieval Armenian Capital. Leuven: Peeters, 2001.
- Cox, Claude. “The Armenian Version and the Text of the Old Greek Psalter.” In Der Septuaginta-Psalter und seine Tochterübersetzungen, edited by A. Aejmelaeus, 174–247. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck and Ruprecht, 2000.
- Crone, Patricia. God’s Rule: Government and Islam. New York: Columbia University Press, 2004.
- _____. “Bābak.” *EI*₃.
- Dadoyan, Seta B. The Armenians in the Medieval Islamic World: Paradigms of Interaction, Seventh to Fourteenth Centuries. 3 vols. New Brunswick, U.S.A., 2011–14.
- Dagron, Gilbert. “Minorités ethniques et religieuses dans l’Orient byzantine à la fin du X^e et au XI^e siècle: L’immigration syrienne.” TM 6 (1976): 177–216.
- Daniel, Elton L. “Taherids.” EIr. <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/taherid-dynasty>. Accessed on 1 April 2020.
- Dédéyan, Gérard, ed. Histoire du peuple arménien. Toulouse: Éditions Privat, 2007 [2^e édition].
- Denoix, Sylvie. “Founded Cities of the Arab World From the Seventh to the Eleventh Centuries.” In The City in the Islamic World, 2 vols., edited by Salma K. Jayyusi et al., 1:115–39. Handbook of Oriental Studies. Section 1, The Near and Middle East, vol. 94. Leiden: Brill, 2008.

- Der Manuelian, Lucy, Murray L Eiland, and Emily J Sano. Weavers, Merchants, and Kings: The Inscribed Rugs of Armenia. Fort Worth: Kimbell Art Museum, 1984.
- Der Nersessian, Sirarpie. Aght'amar: The Church of the Holy Cross. Harvard Armenian Texts and Studies 1. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1965.
- Donabédian, Patrick. «La renaissance de l'architecture (IX^e-XI^e siècle).» Musée du Louvre éditions. Armenia sacra; m'emoire chrétienne des Arméniens (IVe-XVIIIe siècle), Somogy éditions d'art, pp.124–136, 2007, 978-2-7572-0066-7; 978-2-35031-068-8.
- Dorfmann-Lazarev, Igor. Arméniens et Byzantins à l'époque de Photius: Deux débats théologiques après le Triomphe de l'Orthodoxie. Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum Orientalium 584, subsidia 106. Leuven: Peeters, 2004.
- _____. Christ in Armenian Tradition: Doctrine, Apocrypha, Art (Sixth–Tenth Centuries). Journal of Eastern Christian Studies 68, nos. 3–4 (2016): 217–402, monograph issue. Leuven: Peeters.
- Durean, Eghishē. Patmut' iwn hay matenagrut' ean. Constantinople, 1885 (1st ed.); Jerusalem, 1933 (2nd ed.).
- Dyer, Joseph. “The Psalms in Monastic Prayer.” In The Place of the Psalms in the Intellectual Culture of the Middle Ages, edited by Nancy van Deusen, 59–89. New York: State University of New York Press, 1999.
- Dysinger, Luke, OSB. Psalmody and Prayer in the Writings of Evagrius Ponticus. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005.
- Eastmond, Antony and Lynn Jones. “Robing, Power, and Legitimacy in Armenia and Georgia.” In Robes and Honor: The Medieval World of Investiture, edited by Stewart Gordon, 147–92. New York: Palgrave, 2001.
- Eger, A. Asa. The Islamic-Byzantine Frontier: Interaction and Exchange Among Muslim and Christian Communities. London: I.B. Tauris, 2015.
- Erdeljan, Jelena. Chosen Places: Constructing New Jerusalems in Slavia Orthodoxa. East Central and Eastern Europe in the Middle Ages, 450–1450, vol. 45. Leiden: Brill, 2017.
- Ervine, Roberta R. “Yohannēs Erznkac'i Pluz's Compilation of Commentary on Grammar.” PhD diss., Columbia University, 1988.
- _____. The Blessing of Blessings: Gregory of Narek's Commentary on the Song of Songs. Cistercian Studies 215. Kalamazoo, MI, 2007.

Ewdokiats‘i, Matt‘ēos. Hamarōtut‘iwn varuts‘ tearn tearn gerapatiw rabunapetin Mkhit‘aray metsi abbayi (Համառօտութիւն Վարուց Տեանն Տեանն Գերապատիւ Ռաբունապետին Միտիթարայ Մեծի Աբբայի). Mkhit‘arist Manuscript Library, Vienna, ms. 494. Published in Handēs Amsōrya 49 nos. 4–12 (1949): 321–362.

Fajnzylber, Pablo, Daniel Lederman, and Norman Loayza. “Inequality and Violent Crime.” The Journal of Law & Economics 45, no. 1 (2002): 1–39.

Findikyan, Michael Daniel. The Commentary on the Armenian Daily Office by Bishop Step‘anos Siwnec‘i (d. 735): Critical Edition and Translation with Textual and Liturgical Analysis. Orientalia Christiana Analecta 270. Roma: Pontificio Istituto Orientale, 2004.

Fowden, Garth. Abraham or Aristotle? First Millenium Empires and Exegetical Traditions. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2015.

_____. Before and After Muḥammad: The First Millenium Refocused. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 2013.

_____. Qusayr ‘Amra: Art and the Umayyad elite in late antique Syria. The Transformation of the Classical Heritage 36. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2004.

_____. Empire to Commonwealth: Consequences of Monotheism in Late Antiquity. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1993.

_____. The Egyptian Hermes: A Historical Approach to the Late Pagan Mind, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1986.

Garsoïan, Nina. The Paulician Heresy: A Study of the Origin and Development of Paulicianism in Armenia and the Eastern Provinces of the Byzantine Empire. Columbia University Publications in Near and Middle East Studies. Series A, VI. Paris, 1967.

_____. “Prolegomena to a Study of the Iranian Aspects in Arsacid Armenia.” Handēs Amsoreay 90 (1976): 177–234.

_____. The Epic Histories Attributed to P‘awstos Buzand (Buzandaran Patmut‘iwnk‘). Harvard Armenian Texts and Studies 8. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1989.

_____. “The Aršakuni Dynasty (A.D. 12–[180?]-428).” In The Armenian People From Ancient to Modern Times, edited by Richard Hovannisian, 1:63–94. New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1997.

_____. “The Marzpanate (428–652).” In The Armenian People From Ancient to Modern Times, edited by Richard Hovannisian, 1:95–115. New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1997.

- _____. “The Arab Invasions and the Rise of the Bagratuni (640 – 884).” In The Armenian People From Ancient to Modern Times, edited by Richard Hovannisian, 1:117–42. New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1997.
- _____. “The Independent Kingdoms of Medieval Armenia.” In The Armenian People From Ancient to Modern Times, edited by Richard Hovannisian, 1:143–86. New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1997.
- _____. “The Byzantine Annexation of the Armenian Kingdoms in the Eleventh Century.” In The Armenian People From Ancient to Modern Times, edited by Richard Hovannisian, 1:187–98. New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1997.
- _____. «The Problem of Armenian Integration into the Byzantine Empire.» In Studies on the Internal Diaspora of the Byzantine Empire, edited by Hélène Ahrweiler and Angeliki E. Laiou, 53–124. Washington, D.C.: Dumbarton Oaks, 1998.
- _____. L’Église arménienne et le grand schisme d’Orient. CSCO 574, Subsidia 100. Leuven: Peeters, 1999.
- _____. “Introduction to the Problem of Early Armenian Monasticism.” REArm 30 (2005–07): 177–236.
- _____. “Naxarar.” EIr. Accessed 16 April 2020. <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/naxarar>
- Garsoïan, Nina and Jean-Michel Thierry. “L’indépendance retrouvée : royaume du Nord et royaume du Sud (ix^e-xi^e siècle).” In Histoire du peuple arménien, edited by Gérard Dédéyan, 243–96. Toulouse: Éditions Privat, 2007 (2nd rev. ed.).
- Garsoïan, Nina et Jean-Pierre Mahé. Des Parthes au Califat: Quatre leçons sur la formation de l’identité arménienne. Travaux et mémoires du centre de recherche d’histoire et civilisation de Byzance. Collège de France, Monographies 10. Paris: De Boccard, 1997.
- Garsoïan, Nina G., Thomas F. Mathews, and Robert W. Thomson, eds. East of Byzantium: Syria and Armenia in the Formative Period (Dumbarton Oaks Symposium, 1980). Washington, DC: Dumbarton Oaks, 1982.
- Gasparian, Gurgen. “Hrach‘ya T‘amrazyani hishatakin.” Banber Matenadarani 23 (2016): 6–8.
- Gazzano, Francesca, Lara Pagani, and Giusto Traina, eds. Greek Texts and Armenian Traditions. An Interdisciplinary Approach. Trends in Classics-Supplementary 39. Berlin/Boston: De Gruyter, 2016.

- Géhin, Paul. “Les collections de kephalaia monastiques: Naissance et succès d’un genre entre création originale, plagiat et florilège.” In Theological Minora: The Minor Genres of Byzantine Literature, edited by Antonio Rigo, 1–50. Studies in Byzantine History and Civilization 8. Turnhout: Brepols, 2013.
- Ghalpakhtchian, O. Kh. Il complesso monastic di Sanahin (X–XIII sec.). Documenti di architettura armena 3. Milan, 1970.
- Gignoux, Philippe. “L’Organisation administrative Sasanide: le cas du marzbān.” Jerusalem Studies in Arabic and Islam 4 (1984): 1–30.
- Girk’ koch’ets’ eal zhoghovatsu*. Constantinople, 1793.
- Girk’ or koch’ i zhoghovatsu*. Constantinople, 1747.
- Gordon, Matthew S. The Breaking of a Thousand Swords: A History of the Turkish Military of Samarra (A.H. 200–275/815–889 C.E.). Albany: State University of New York Press, 2001.
- Greenwood, Timothy. “A Corpus of Early Medieval Armenian Inscriptions.” Dumbarton Oaks Papers 58 (2004): 27–91.
- _____. “Failure of a Mission? Photius and the Armenian Church.” Le Muséon 119 nos. 1–2 (2006): 123–67.
- _____. “Armenian Neighbours (600 – 1045).” In The Cambridge History of the Byzantine Empire c. 500 – 1492, edited by Jonathan Shepard, 333–64. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2008.
- _____. “Patterns of Contact and Communication: Constantinople and Armenia 860-976.” In Armenian Constantinople, edited by Richard Hovannisian and Simon Payaslian, 73–100. UCLA Armenian History and Culture Series, Historic Armenian Cities and Provinces 9. Costa Mesa, CA: Mazda, 2010.
- _____. “A Reassessment of the Life and Mathematical Problems of Anania Širakac’i.” REArm 33 (2011): 131–186.
- _____. “‘Imagined past, revealed present:’ A Reassessment of the History of Tarōn [Patmut’ iwn Tarōnoy].” In Mélanges Jean-Pierre Mahé, ed. P. Boisson, A. Mardirossian, A. Ouzounian and C. Zuckerman, TM 18 (2014): 377–392.
- _____. “A Contested Jurisdiction: Armenia in Late Antiquity.” In Sasanian Persia: Between Rome and the Steppes of Eurasia, edited by Eberhard Sauer, 199–220. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 2017.

- _____. “Aristakes Lastivertc‘i and Armenian Urban Consciousness.” In Byzantium in the Eleventh Century: Being in Between. Edited by Marc Lauxtermann and Mark Whittow, 88–105. Abingdon and New York: Routledge, 2017.
- _____. The Universal History of Step‘anos Tarōnec‘i: Introduction, Translation and Commentary. Oxford Studies in Byzantium. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2017.
- _____. “Basil I, Constantine VII and Armenian Literary Tradition in Byzantium.” In Reading in the Byzantine Empire and Beyond, edited by Teresa Shawcross and Ida Toth, 447–66. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2018.
- _____. “Negotiating the Roman past in later tenth-century Armenia.” Medieval Worlds: Comparative and Interdisciplinary Studies 10 (2019): 130–50.
- _____. “Armenian Space in Late Antiquity.” In Historiography and Space in Late Antiquity, edited by Peter Van Nuffelen, 57–85. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2019.
- _____. “Historical Tradition, Memory and Law in Vaspurakan in the Era of Gagik Arcruni.” In The Church of the Holy Cross of Alt‘amar: Politics, Art, Spirituality in the Kingdom of Vaspurakan, edited by Zaroui Pogossian and Edda Vardanyan, 27–48. Armenian Texts and Studies 3. Leiden: Brill, 2019.
- Greppin, John A. C. “The Armenians and the Greek Geoponica.” Byzantion 57 no. 1 (1987): 46–55.
- Grierson, Philip. “Kiurikē I or Kiurikē II of Lori-Armenia? A Note on Attributions.” American Numismatic Society Museum Notes no. 10 (1962): 107–12.
- Grigoryan, Gohar. “King Gagik Arcruni’s Portrait on the Church of Alt‘amar.” In The Church of the Holy Cross of Alt‘amar: Politics, Art, Spirituality in the Kingdom of Vaspurakan, edited by Zaroui Pogossian and Edda Vardanyan, 416–40. Armenian Texts and Studies volume 3. Leiden: Brill, 2019.
- Grousset, René. Histoire de l’Arménie des origines à 1071. Paris, 1984 [reprint of 1947 ed.].
- Guillaumont, Antoine. Un philosophe au désert : Évagre le Pontique. Textes et Traditions 8. Paris: Librairie philosophique J. Vrin, 2004.
- Hadot, Pierre. Exercices spirituels et philosophie antique. Collection des études augustinienes. Série antiquité 88. Paris: Études augustinienes, 1981. rev. ed.: Paris, Albin Michel, 2002.
- _____. Qu’est-ce que la philosophie antique? Folio essais 280. Paris: Gallimard, 1995.

- _____. Philosophy as a Way of Life: Spiritual Exercises from Socrates to Foucault. Translated by Michael Chase. Oxford: Blackwell, 1995.
- _____. What is Ancient Philosophy? Translated by Michael Chase. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 2002.
- Hakobyan, “Surb Grigor Narekats‘u chgnaranē.” Vardzk‘ 5/1 (2012): 21–32.
- Hamilton, Janet and Bernard Hamilton, eds., with Yuri Stoyanov. Christian Dualist Heresies in the Byzantine World, c. 650–c. 1450. Manchester Medieval Sources Series. Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1998.
- Hats‘uni, Vardan. Kat‘oghikosakan ěntrut‘iwn ew dzerěnadrut‘iwn patmutedan mēj. Venice: St. Lazarus Press, 1930.
- Hermans, Erik. A Companion to the Global Early Middle Ages. Leeds: Arc Humanities Press, 2020.
- Herrin, Judith. “The Quinisext Council (692) as a Continuation of Chalcedon.” In Chalcedon in Context: Church Councils 400–700, edited by Richard Price and Mary Whitby, 148–68. Translated Texts for Historians, Contexts 1. Liverpool: Liverpool University Press, 2009.
- Hewsen, Robert H. “The Kingdom of the Lupenians: A Forgotten State of Christian Caucasia.” Annual of the Society for the Study of Caucasia 1 (1989): 13–20.
- _____. The Geography of Ananias of Širak (Ašxarhac‘oyc‘): The Long and the Short Recensions. Wiesbaden: Dr. Ludwig Reichert Verlag, 1992.
- _____. “On the Location of the Lupenians, A Vanished People of Southeast Caucasia.” Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum Hungaricae 50 no. 1/3 (1997): 111–16.
- _____. Armenia: A Historical Atlas. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2001.
- Hicks, Daniel L., Joan Hamory Hicks. “Jealous of the Joneses: conspicuous consumption, inequality, and crime.” Oxford Economic Papers 66, no. 4 (2014): 1090–1120.
- Hild, Friedrich and Marcell Restle. Kappadokien (Kappadokia, Charsianon, Sebasteia und Lykandos). Tabula Imperii Byzantini 2. Vienna: Austrian Academy of Sciences, 1981.
- Hillenbrand, Carole. “Marwānids.” *EI*₂.
- Hobsbawm, Eric. Bandits. New York: New Press, 2000 (rev. ed).

- Holmes, Catherine and Naomi Standen, eds. The Global Middle Ages. Past and Present vol. 238, supplement 13. Oxford University Press, 2018.
- Hovannisian, Richard, ed. The Armenian People From Ancient to Modern Times. 2 vols. New York, 1997.
- Hovhannessian, Vahan. “The Canons of the Council of Šahapivan.” REArm 37 (2016–2017): 73–95.
- Hovhannisyán, Hasmik. “Hayagir arájin dramnerē (The First Coins with Armenian Writing).” In Hayastani dramashrjanarutyán patmut’yuně (Հայաստանի դրամաչրջանառության պատմությունը / History of Coinage in Armenia), edited by Harut’yun Hambardzumyan, Ruzanna Vardanyan, and Gohar Hovhannisyán, 98–99. Central Bank of Armenia, 2018.
- Inchichean, Ghukas. Storagrut’iwn hin hayastaneayts’ [Ստորագրութիւնն հին հայաստանեայց / Description of Ancient Armenia]. Venice: St. Lazarus Press, 1822.
- Inglisian, Vahan. “Die Armenische Literatur.” In G. Deeters, G. R. Solta, Vahan Inglisian, Armenisch und kaukasische sprachen. Handbuch der Orientalistik, edited by B. Spuler. Erste Abteilung: Der nahe und der mittlere osten, edited by B. Spuler. Band 7, 156–250, 269–72. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1963.
- Iwzbashean, Ashxēn. “Ananiayi vardapeti khrat vasn khonarhut’ean.” Handēs Amsōrya 124 (2010): 1–16.
- Jeffery, Peter OBLSB. “Psalmody and Prayer in Early Monasticism.” In The Cambridge History of Medieval Monasticism in the Latin West, edited by Alison I. Beach and Isabelle Cochelin, 112–27. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2020.
- Jones, Lynn. Between Islam and Byzantium: Aght’amar and the Visual Construction of Medieval Armenian Rulership. Burlington, VT: Ashgate, 2007.
- Kaldellis, Anthony. Streams of Gold, Rivers of Blood: The Rise and Fall of Byzantium, 955 A.D. to the First Crusade. Onassis Series in Hellenic Culture. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2017.
- _____. Romanland: Ethnicity and Empire in Byzantium. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 2019.
- Kalvesmaki, Joel. “Evagrius in the Byzantine Genre of Chapters.” In Evagrius and His Legacy, edited by Joel Kalvesmaki and Robin Darling Young, 257–87. Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 2016.
- _____. “Evagrius Ponticus.” ODLA.

_____. Guide to Evagrius Ponticus, 2021 edition (Washington, DC, 2021), evagriusponticus.net.

Kennedy, Hugh. The Prophet and the Age of the Caliphates: The Islamic Near East from the Sixth to the Eleventh Century. Harlow: Pearson Longman, 2004 (2nd ed).

_____. “The Late ‘Abbāsīd Pattern, 945–1050.” In The Formation of the Islamic World Sixth to Eleventh Centuries, edited by Chase F. Robinson, 360–394. Vol. 1 of The New Cambridge History of Islam, edited by Michael Cook. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010.

_____. “The Middle East in Islamic Late Antiquity.” In Fiscal Regimes and the Political Economy of Premodern States, edited by Andrew Monson and Walter Scheidel, 390–403. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2015.

K‘iparean, Kiwregh. Patmut ‘iwn hay hin grakanut ‘ean. Venice, 1992.

Kolanjian, Souren E. “Ukhtanes the Historian: Bishop of Edessa or Sebastia?” In Armenian Sebastia/Sivas and Lesser Armenia, edited by Richard G. Hovannisian, 137–52. Historic Armenian Cities and Provinces 5. Costa Mesa, CA: Mazda, 2004.

Konstantinovskiy, Julia. Evagrius Ponticus: The Making of a Gnostic. Ashgate New Critical Thinking in Religion, Theology, and Biblical Studies. Farnham and Burlington: Ashgate, 2009.

Kouymjian, Dickran. “The Evolution of Armenian Gospel Illumination: The Formative Period (9th–11th Centuries).” In Armenia and the Bible: Papers Presented to the International Symposium Held at Heidelberg, July 16–19, 1990, edited by Christoph Burchard, 125–42. University of Pennsylvania Armenian Texts and Studies 12. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1993.

_____. “An Interpretation of Bagratid and Artsruni Art and Ceremony: A Review Essay.” Journal of the Society for Armenian Studies 18, no. 2 (2009): 111–31.

Kouymjian, Dickran and Barlow Der Mugrdechian (eds). David of Sassoun: Critical Studies on the Armenian Epic. Fresno: Press at California State University, 2013.

Kovalev, Roman K. “Mint Output in Tenth-Century Bukhārā: A Case Study of Dirham Production and Monetary Circulation in Northern Europe.” Russian History/Histoire Russe 28 nos. 1–4 (2001): 245–71.

_____. “Dirham Mint Output of Samanid Samarqand and its Connection to the Beginnings of Trade with Northern Europe (10th century).” Histoire & Mesure 17, nos. 3–4 (2002): 197–216.

- Kovalev, Roman K. and Alexis C. Kaelin. “Circulation of Arab Silver in Medieval Afro-Eurasia: Preliminary Observation.” History Compass 5, no. 2 (2007): 560–80.
- Kramers, J. H., “Marzubān.” In Encyclopaedia of Islam, First Edition (1913-1936). Edited by M. Th. Houtsma, T.W. Arnold, R. Basset, R. Hartmann. Accessed 17 August 2020 <http://dx.doi.org/10.1163/2214-871X_ei1_SIM_4580>.
- Krawiec, Rebecca. “Literacy and Memory in Evagrius’s Monasticism.” Journal of Early Christian Studies 21.3 (2013): 363–90.
- Krikorian, Mesrob K. “The Letter of St. Gregory of Narek Addressed to Thondrakian Heretics: Theological and Sacramental Aspects.” In Saint Grégoire de Narek: Théologien et Mystique. Colloque International tenu à l’Institut Pontifical Oriental, edited by Jean-Pierre Mahé et Boghos Levon Zekiyan, 169–86. Orientalia Christiana Analecta 275. Roma, 2006.
- K’yoseyan, Hakob H. Anania Sanahnets’i. Astuatsabanakan bnagrner usumnasirut’yunner (Theological texts studies) 1. Ējmiatsin, 2000.
- Langlois, Victor. Le trésor des chartes d’Arménie ou Cartulaire de la chancellerie royale des Roupéniens, comprenant tous les documents relatifs aux établissements fondés en Cilicie par les ordres. Venice: St. Lazarus Press, 1863.
- La Porta, Sergio. Review of Répertoire des monastères arméniens, by Michel Thierry. JSAS 13 (2003–2004): 158–60.
- _____. “‘The Kingdom and the Sultanate were Conjoined’: Legitimizing Land and Power in Armenia During the 12th and Early 13th Centuries.” REArm 34 (2012): 73–118.
- _____. “Armeno-Latin Intellectual Exchange in the Fourteenth Century: Scholarly Traditions in Conversation and Competition.” Medieval Encounters 21 nos. 2–3 (2015): 269–94.
- _____. “Monasticism and the Construction of the Armenian Intellectual Tradition.” In Monasticism in Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Republics, edited by Ines Angeli Murzaku, 330–50. Routledge Religion, Society and Government in Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet States. New York: Routledge, 2016.
- Larsen, Lillian I. “‘Excavating the Excavations’ of Early Monastic Education.” In Monastic Education in Late Antiquity: The Transformation of Classical Paideia, edited by Lillian I. Larsen and Samuel Robinson, 101–24. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2018.
- Laurent, J. and M. Canard. L’Arménie entre Byzance et l’Islam depuis la conquête arabe jusqu’en 886. Armenian Library of the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation. Lisbon : Librairie Bertrand, 1980.

Lemerle, Paul. Le premier humanisme Byzantin: Notes et remarques sur enseignement et culture à Byzance des origines au X^e siècle. Bibliothèque Byzantine 6. Paris : Presses universitaires de France, 1971.

_____. «L’histoire des pauliciens d’Asie mineure d’après les sources grecques.» TM 5 (1973):1–148.

Lidov, Alexei, ed. New Jerusalems: Hierotopy and Iconography of Sacred Spaces. Moscow: Indrik, 2009.

Macler, Frédéric. Étienne Asolik de Taron. Histoire universelle. Paris, 1917.

Mahé, Annie et Jean-Pierre. Grégoire de Narek. Tragédie. Matean olbergut ‘ean. Le Livre de Lamentation. Introduction, Traduction et Notes. CSCO 584, subsidia 106. Louvain: Peeters, 2000.

_____. Histoire de l’Arménie des origines à nos jours. Paris, 2012.

Mahé, Jean-Pierre. «Quadrivium et cursus d’études au VII^e siècle en Arménie et dans le monde byzantin d’après le K’nnikon d’Anania Širakac‘i.» TM 10 (1987): 159–206.

_____. “L’église arménienne de 611 à 1066.” In Histoire du christianisme des origines à nos jours: Tome 4: Evêques, moines et empereurs (610-1054), edited by Gilbert Dagron, Pierre Riché, and André Vauchez, 457–547. Paris, 1993.

_____. “Confession religieuse et identité nationale dans l’église arménienne du VII^e au XI^e siècle.” In Nina Garsoïan et Jean-Pierre Mahé. Des Parthes au Califat: Quatre leçons sur la formation de l’identité arménienne, 59–78. TM 10. Paris: De Boccard, 1997.

_____. “Le rôle et la fonction du Catholicos d’Arménie du VII^e au XI^e siècle.” In Nina Garsoïan et Jean-Pierre Mahé, Des Parthes au Califat: Quatre leçons sur la formation de l’identité arménienne, 79–105. TM 10. Paris: De Boccard, 1997.

_____. “Monachisme et personnalité dans l’Arménie médiévale (V^e–XIII^e siècles).” Eigene und das Ganze 43 no. 2 (2002): 381–92.

_____. “Hrach‘ya T‘amrazyanë ew narekats‘iagitut‘yunë.” Banber Matenadarani 23 (2016): 20–29.

Maksoudian, Krikor. “The Chalcedonian Issue and the Early Bagratids: The Council of Širakawan.” REArm 21 (1988–1989): 333–344.

- _____. “A Note on the Monasteries Founded During the Reign of King Abas I Bagratuni.” REArm 22 (1990–1991): 203–15.
- _____. Chosen of God: The Election of the Catholicos of all Armenians From the Fourth Century to the Present. New York: St. Vartan Press, 1995.
- Manandian [Manandean], Hagop. Yunaban dprotš ‘ě ew nra zargats ‘man shrjannerě. Vienna: Mkhitarist Press, 1928.
- _____. The Trade and Cities of Armenia in Relation to Ancient World Trade. Translated from the Second Revised Edition by Nina G. Garsoïan. Armenian Library of the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation. Lisbon: Livraria Bertrand, 1965.
- Maranci, Christina. Vigilant Powers: Three Churches of Early Medieval Armenia. Brepols, 2015.
- _____. The Art of Armenia: An Introduction. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2018.
- Mardirossian, Aram. “Lettre à la splendide et célèbre communauté de Kčaw: Grigor Narekac‘i contre les thondrakiens.” REArm 29 (2003–2004): 99–115.
- Martin-Hisard, Bernadette. «Constantinople et les archontes du monde caucasien dans le Livre des cérémonies, II, 48.» TM 13 (2000): 359–530.
- _____. “Domination arabe et libertés arméniennes (VII^e–IX^e siècle).” In Histoire du peuple arménien, edited by Gérard Dédéyan, 213–41. Toulouse: Éditions Privat, 2007 [2^e édition].
- Mathews, Thomas F. “The Classic Phase of Bagratid and Artsruni Illumination: The Tenth and Eleventh Centuries.” In Treasures in Heaven: Armenian Illuminated Manuscripts, edited by Thomas F. Mathews and Roger S. Wieck, 54–65. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1994.
- McCormick, Michael. “De Ceremoniis.” ODB.
- McGuckin, John A. St. Cyril of Alexandria: The Christological Controversy: Its History, Theology, and Texts. Crestwood, NY: St. Vladimir's Seminary Press, 2004.
- McKinnon, James W. “The Book of Psalms, Monasticism, and the Western Liturgy.” In The Place of the Psalms in the Intellectual Culture of the Middle Ages, edited by Nancy van Deusen, 43–58. New York: State University of New York Press, 1999.
- Mercier, Jacques and Claude Lepage. Lalibela: Wonder of Ethiopia: The Monolithic Churches and their Treasures. Translated by Jennifer White-Thévenot and Jane Degeorges. London: Paul Holberton Publishing, 2012.

- Merian, Sylvie. “The Structure of Armenian Bookbinding and its Relation to Near Eastern Bookmaking Traditions.” PhD diss., Columbia University, 1993.
- Metreveli, Roin. The Golden Age: Georgia from the 11th century to the first quarter of the 13th century. T’bilisi: Artanuji Publishers, 2010.
- Millar, Fergus. “The Syriac Acts of the Second Council of Ephesus (449).” In Chalcedon in Context: Church Councils 400–700, edited by Richard Price and Mary Whitby, 45–69. Translated Texts for Historians, Contexts 1. Liverpool: Liverpool University Press, 2009.
- Milwright, Marcus. “Archaeology and Material Culture.” The Formation of the Islamic World Sixth to Eleventh Centuries, edited by Chase F. Robinson, 664–82. Vol. 1 of The New Cambridge History of Islam, edited by Michael Cook. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010.
- Minorsky, Vladimir. La Domination des Dailamites. Publications de la société des études iraniennes et de l’art persan 3. Paris: E. Leroux, 1932.
- _____. Studies in Caucasian History. Cambridge Oriental Series 6. London: Taylor’s Foreign Press, 1953.
- _____. “Musāfirids.” *EL*₂.
- Mnats’akanyan, Step’an. Il complesso monastico di Haghbat (X–XIII sec.). Documenti di architettura armena 1. Milan, 1970 (2nd ed.).
- _____. Aght’amar. Erevan: Armenian Academy of Sciences Press, 1983.
- Moosa, Matti. Extremist Shiites: The Ghulat Sects. Syracuse: Syracuse University Press, 1988.
- Morony, Michael. “The Early Islamic Mining Boom.” Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient 62, no. 1 (2019): 166–221.
- Muradyan, Gohar. “The Rhetorical Exercises (Progymnasmata) in the Old Armenian ‘Book of Chreia’ (Girk’ Pitoyic’): Translation or Original Composition? (On the Occasion of P. Cowe’s Review).” REArm 27 (1998–2000): 399–416.
- _____. Grecisms in Ancient Armenian. Hebrew University Armenian Studies Series 13. Louvain: Peeters, 2012.
- _____. “Hrach’ya T’amrazyani narekats’ iagitakan verjin grk’erë.” Banber Matenadarani 23 (2016): 103–107.

- Murateants', M. Patmut'iwñ Hayastaneayts' arak'elakan surb ekeghets'woy. Jerusalem, 1872.
- Murats'an. "T'ontrakets'ineri aghandë ew Ējmiatsni mi miabani ayd aghandi masin arats aknarknerë." Nor-Dar 9 no. 33 (February 26, 1892): 1; no. 35 (February 29, 1892): 1–2.
- Nakada, Kosuke. "Uxtanēs of Sebasteia and Byzantine-Armenian Relations in the Tenth Century." REArm 38 (2018–2019): 167–94.
- Nersessian, Vrej. The Tondrakian Movement: Religious Movements in the Armenian Church from the Fourth to the Tenth Centuries. Allison Park, PA, 1988.
- _____. "Armenia, partitions of." ODLA.
- Neumann, Carl Friedrich. Versuch einer Geschichte der armenischen Literatur nach den Werken der Mechitaristen. Leipzig, 1836.
- Nichanian, Marc. "Enlightenment and Historical Thoughts." In Enlightenment and Diaspora: The Armenian and Jewish Cases, edited by Richard G. Hovannisian and David N. Myers, 87–123. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1999.
- Ohanjanyan, Anna M. "The Key of Truth and the Problem of the 'Neo-T'ontrakites' at the End of the 19th Century." JSAS 20 (2011): 131–136.
- Ōrmanean, Maghak'ia. Azgapatum. 3 vols. Constantinople, 1912–27.
- Oskean, Hamazasp. Vaspurakan-Vani vank'erë [Վասպուրկական-Վանի վանքերը = Die armenischen Klöster in Vaspowrakan-Van]. Vol 1. Vienna: Mkhit'arean Press, 1940.
- _____. Bardzr Hayk'i Vank'erë [Բարձր Հայքի վանքերը = Die Klöster Hocharmeniens]. Vienna: Mkhit'arean Press, 1951.
- Palmer, Andrew. "Charting Undercurrents in the History of the West-Syrian People: The Resettlement of Byzantine Melitene after 934." Oriens Christianus 70 (1986): 37–68.
- Papazian, Michael. The Doctor of Mercy: The Sacred Treasures of St. Gregory of Narek. Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 2019.
- Perikhanian, A. "Iranian Society and Law." In The Seleucid, Parthian and Sasanian Periods, edited by Ehsan Yarshater, 627–80. Vol. 3(2) of The Cambridge History of Iran. Cambridge University Press, 1983.
- Peters, R., Doris Behrens-Abouseif, et al. "Wakf." *EI*₂.

- Petrosyan (Petrossian), Levon. “Gregory of Narek and the Narekian Fathers: The Mystery of Love from the Commentary on the Song of Songs to the Book of Lamentations.” JSAS 21 (2012): 27–51.
- Phillipson, David W. Ancient Churches of Ethiopia. New Haven: Yale University Press, 2009.
- Pogharean, Norayr. Hay groghner, V–XVII dar. Jerusalem: Sts. James Press, 1971.
- Pogossian, Zaroui. “The Foundation of the Monastery of Sevan: A Case Study of Monasteries, Economy, and Political Power in IX-X Century Armenia.” In Le Valli dei Monaci, Atti del Convegno internazionale di studio, Roma - Subiaco, 17-19 maggio 2010, edited by Letizia Ermini Pani, 181–215. Spoleto, 2012.
- _____. “Locating Religion, Controlling Territory: Conquest and Legitimation in Late Ninth-Century Vaspurakan and its Interreligious Context.” In Locating Religions: Contact, Diversity and Translocality, edited by Reinhold Gleis and Nikolas Jaspert, 173–233. Leiden: Brill, 2017.
- _____. “Relics, Rulers, Patronage: The True Cross of Varag and the Church of the Holy Cross on Alt‘amar.” In The Church of the Holy Cross of Alt‘amar: Politics, Art, Spirituality in the Kingdom of Vaspurakan, edited by Zaroui Pogossian and Edda Vardanyan, 126–206. Armenian Texts and Studies volume 3. Leiden: Brill, 2019.
- Pogossian, Zaroui and Edda Vardanyan. The Church of the Holy Cross of Alt‘amar: Politics, Art, Spirituality in the Kingdom of Vaspurakan. Armenian Texts and Studies 3. Leiden: Brill, 2019.
- Polanyi, Karl. The Great Transformation: The Political and Economic Origins of Our Time. Boston: Beacon Press, 2001.
- Pourshariati, Parvaneh. Decline and Fall of the Sasanian Empire: The Sasanian-Parthian Confederacy and the Arab Conquest of Iran. London: I.B. Tauris, 2008.
- Preiser-Kappeler, Johannes. “Aristocrats, Mercenaries, Clergymen and Refugees: Deliberate and Forced Mobility of Armenians in the Early Medieval Mediterranean (6th to 11th Century A.D.)” In Migration Histories of the Medieval Afroeurasian Transition Zone: Aspects of Mobility between Africa, Asia and Europe, 300–1500 C.E., edited by Johannes Preiser-Kapeller, Lucian Reinfandt, and Yannis Stouraitis, 327–84. Studies in Global Social History 39, Studies in Global Migration History 13. Leiden, Brill, 2020.
- Price, Richard. “The Council of Chalcedon (451): A Narrative.” In Chalcedon in Context: Church Councils 400–700, edited by Richard Price and Mary Whitby, 70–91. Translated Texts for Historians, Contexts 1. Liverpool: Liverpool University Press, 2009.

- _____. “Truth, Omission, and Fiction in the Acts of Chalcedon.” In Chalcedon in Context: Church Councils 400–700, edited by Richard Price and Mary Whitby, 92–106. Translated Texts for Historians, Contexts 1. Liverpool: Liverpool University Press, 2009.
- Rapp, Stephen H. “Georgia before the Mongols.” Oxford Research Encyclopedia of Asian History. Accessed 3 April 2020.
<https://oxfordre.com/asianhistory/view/10.1093/acrefore/9780190277727.001.0001/acrefore-9780190277727-e-282>.
- Raymond, André. “The Spatial Organization of the City.” In The City in the Islamic World, 2 vols., edited by Salma K. Jayyusi et al., 1:47–70. Handbook of Oriental Studies. Section 1, The Near and Middle East, vol. 94. Leiden: Brill, 2008.
- Robinson, Chase F., ed. The New Cambridge History of Islam. Vol. 1: The Formation of the Islamic World, Sixth to Eleventh Centuries. Cambridge, 2010.
- _____. “The rise of Islam, 600–705.” In The Formation of the Islamic World Sixth to Eleventh Centuries, edited by Chase F. Robinson, 173–225. Vol. 1 of The New Cambridge History of Islam, edited by Michael Cook. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010.
- Russell, Donald and Andrew Frank Moore. “progymnasmata.” OCD.
- _____. “Theon (3) (RE 5), Aelius.” OCD.
- Russell, James R. Zoroastrianism in Armenia. Harvard Iranian Studies 5. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1987.
- _____. “The Mother of All Heresies: A Late Medieval Armenian Text on the Yuškaparik.” REArm 24 (1993): 273–293.
- _____. “On the Origin and Invention of the Armenian Script.” Le Muséon 107 nos. 3–4 (1994): 317–333.
- _____. “The Last of the Paulicians.” Hask hayagitakan taregirk 7–8 (1995–1996): 33–47.
- _____. “Alphabets.” In Late Antiquity: A Guide to the Postclassical World, edited by Glen Warren Bowersock, Peter Brown, and Oleg Grabar, 288–290. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1999.
- _____. “Heresies: On an Armenian Prayer to the Sun.” JSAS 26 (2017): 3–16.
- Russell, Norman. The Doctrine of Deification in the Greek Patristic Tradition. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2004.

- Saint-Martin, Jean. Mémoires historiques et géographiques sur l'Arménie. 2 volumes. Paris: L'Imprimerie royale, 1818–1819.
- Sanjian, Avedis. K., ed. David Anhaght': The Invincible Philosopher. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1986.
- Sargisean, Barsegh. Usumnasirut' iwn Manik' ēa-Pawlikean T'onrakets' ineru aghandin ew Gr. Narekats'woy t'ught'ě. Venice, 1893.
- Sharpe, Matthew. "Pierre Hadot (1922–2010)." Internet Encyclopedia of Philosophy. Accessed 15 April 2020. <https://www.iep.utm.edu/hadot/>.
- Shatzmiller, Maya. Labour in the Medieval Islamic World. Islamic History and Civilization Studies and Texts 4. Leiden: Brill, 1994.
- _____. "Economic Performance and Economic Growth in the Early Islamic World." Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient 54, no. 2 (2011): 132–84.
- _____. "Recent trends in Middle East economic history: Cultural factors and structural change in the medieval period 650–1500 (Part one)." History Compass 16, no. 12, 2018, e12504
- _____. "Recent trends in Middle East economic history: Cultural factors and structural change in the medieval period 650–1500 (Part two)." History Compass 16, no. 12, 2018, e12511
- Shepard, Jonathan. "Equilibrium to Expansion (886–1025)." In The Cambridge History of the Byzantine Empire c. 500 – 1492, edited by Jonathan Shepard, 493–536. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2008.
- Shirinian, Manea Erna. "The Liber Causarum: A Mediaeval Armenian Isagogical Collection." Le Muséon 130 nos. 1–2 (2017): 139–176.
- _____. "'Artak'in ew 'nurb' greank'." Ashtanak: Armenological Periodical 2 (1998): 15–45.
- Sizgorich, Thomas. Violence and Belief in Late Antiquity: Militant Devotion in Christianity and Islam. Divinations: Rereading Late Ancient Religion. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2009.
- Somal, Placido Sukias. Quadro della storia letteraria di armenia. Venice, 1829.
- Sourdel, D. «Bābak.» *EI*₂.
- Stewart, Columba, OSB. "Imageless Prayer and the Theological Vision of Evagrius Ponticus." Journal of Early Christian Studies 9 no. 2 (2001): 173–204.

- _____. “Evagrius Ponticus on Monastic Pedagogy.” In Abba: The Tradition of Orthodoxy in the West; Festschrift for Bishop Kallistos (Ware) of Diokleia, edited by John Behr, Andrew Louth, and Dimitri E. Conomos, 241–71. Crestwood, NY: St. Vladimir’s Seminary Press, 2003.
- Stone, Michael E. “The Armenian Apocryphal Literature of the Old Testament in the Twentieth Century.” In Armenian Philology in the Modern Era, edited by Valentina Calzolari and Michael E. Stone, 247–263. Leiden: Brill, 2014.
- Subrahmanyam, Sanjay. “Connected Histories: Notes towards a Reconfiguration of Islamic Eurasia.” Modern Asian Studies 31, no. 3. Special Issue: The Eurasian Context of the Early Modern History of Mainland South East Asia, 1400–1800. (July 1997): 735–762.
- _____. “Global Intellectual History Beyond Hegel and Marx.” History and Theory 54 (February 2015): 126–137.
- Symcox, Geoffrey. Jerusalem in the Alps: The Sacro Monte of Varallo and the Sanctuaries of North-Western Italy. Cursor Mundi 37. Turnhout: Brepols, 2019.
- T’ahmizyan, N. “Anania Narekats’u ev Nareka vank’i erazhshtakan avanduyt’neri masin,” Ejmiatsin (1976/8–9): 29–37.
- T’amrazyan, Arusyak. “Hrach’ya T’amrazyani kensamatenagitut’yuně.” Banber Matenadarani 23 (2016): 9–19.
- T’amrazyan, Hrach’ya. Anania Narekats’i, Kyank’ě ev Matenagrut’yuně. Erevan, 1986.
- _____. Narekyan dprots’ě. Erevan, 1999.
- _____. Grigor Narekats’in ev norplatonakanut’yuně. Erevan, 2004.
- _____. “Anania Narekats’i.” MH 10:311–27.
- _____. “Anania Narekats’u ‘Hawatarmat’ dawanabanakan erkě.” MH 10:456–479.
- _____. “Anania Narekats’u ‘Nerboghean asats’eal i surbn kat’ughikē ekeghets’i’ erkě.” MH 10:599–618.
- _____. Grigor Narekats’in ev Narekyan dprots’ě. 3 vols. Erevan, 2013–17.
- Tannous, Jack. The Making of the Medieval Middle East: Religion, Society, and Simple Believers. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 2018.

- Ter-Ghewondyan, Aram. The Arab Emirates in Bagratid Armenia. Translated by Nina G. Garsoïan. Lisbon: Livraria Bertrand, 1976.
- Terian, Abraham. “The Hellenizing School: Its Time, Place, and Scope of Activities Reconsidered.” In East of Byzantium: Syria and Armenia in the Formative Period (Dumbarton Oaks Symposium, 1980), edited by Nina G. Garsoïan, Thomas F. Mathews, and Robert W. Thomson. Washington, DC: Dumbarton Oaks, 1982, 175–86. Reprinted in Opera Selecta Teriana. St. Nersess Theological Review 13 (2008): 25–44.
- _____. Macarius of Jersusalem: Letter to the Armenians, A.D. 335: Introduction, Text, Translation and Commentary. AVANT Series 4. Crestwood, NY: St. Vladimir’s Seminary Press, 2008.
- _____. “Gregory of Narek.” In The Wiley Blackwell Companion to Patristics, edited by Ken Parry, 278–92. Oxford: Wiley-Blackwell, 2015.
- _____. The Festal Works of St. Gregory of Narek: Annotated Translation of the Odes, Litanies, and Encomia. Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 2016.
- _____. “Miaphysites, Armenian.” ODLA.
- _____. “Monastic Turmoil in Sixth-Century Jerusalem and the South Caucasus: The Letter of Patriarch John IV to Catholicos Abas of the Caucasian Albanians.” Dumbarton Oaks Papers 74 (2020): 9–39.
- Ter-Minasyan, E. G. Mijnadaryan aghandneri tsagman ev zargats ‘man patmut‘yunits‘. Erevan, 1968.
- Tēr-Mkrтч‘ean, Galust [Miaban]. “Anania Narekats‘ i 10-rd dar.” Ararat 25, no. 1 (January 1892): 1–18.
- Tēr-Mkrтч‘ean, Karapet. Die Paulikianer im Byzantinischen Kaiserreiche und verwandte ketzerische erscheinungen in Armenien. Leipzig, 1893.
- Tēr-Mkrтч‘ean, Karapet, ed. Knik‘ Hawatoy Ĕndhanur Surb Ekeghets‘woy: hughghap‘ ar ew S. Hoge kir harts‘n merots‘ dawanut‘eants‘. Ĕjmiatsin, 1914.
- Thierry, Jean-Michel. Monuments arméniens du Vaspurakan. Institut français d’archéologie du Proche-Orient / Bibliothèque archéologique et historique, t. 129. Paris: Librairie orientaliste Paul Geuthner, 1989.
- _____. Répertoire des monastères arméniens. Turnhout: Brepols, 1993.

- Thomas, John and Angela Constantinides Hero, eds. Byzantine Monastic Foundation Documents: A Complete Translation of the Surviving Founders' Typika and Testaments, 5 vols. Washington, D.C., 2000.
- Tinti, Irene. "On the Chronology and Attribution of the Old Armenian Timaeus: A Status Quaestionis and New Perspectives." Egitto e Vicino Oriente 35 (2012): 219–82.
- Tobon, Monica. "Words Spoken in Silence: the 'Missing Chapters' of Evagrius' Kephalaia Gnostika." Studia Patristica 72 (2014): 197–210.
- Tougher, Shaun. "After Iconoclasm (850–886)." In The Cambridge History of the Byzantine Empire c. 500 – 1492, edited by Jonathan Shepard, 292–304. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2008.
- Toumanoff, Cyril. Studies in Christian Caucasian History. Washington, D.C.: Georgetown University Press, 1963.
- Treadgold, Warren. A History of the Byzantine State and Society. Stanford: Stanford University Press, 1997.
- Turner, H. J. M. St. Symeon the New Theologian and Spiritual Fatherhood. Leiden: Brill, 1990.
- Ut'mazean, H. M. Siwnik' ě XI-X darerum. Erevan: 1958.
- Vacca, Alison. Non-Muslim Provinces under early Islam: Islamic Rule and Iranian Legitimacy in Armenia and Caucasian Albania. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2017.
- van Lint, Theo Maarten. "Among Others: Greek in Context in the Letters of Grigor Magistros Pahlawuni (eleventh century)." In Greek Texts and Armenian Traditions. An Interdisciplinary Approach, edited by Francesca Gazzano, Lara Pagani & Giusto Traina, 197–213. Trends in Classics-Supplementary 39. Berlin: De Gruyter, 2016.
- Vardanyan, Aram. Islamic Coins Struck in Historic Armenia. I: Armīniya, Arrān (Madīnat Arrān), Barda'a, Dabīl, Hārūnabad/Hārūniya and Ma'dan Bājunays: Early 'Abbāsīd period, 142–277 AH / 759–891 AD. Erevan: Tigran Mets Publishing, 2011.
- _____. "The Administration of the 'Abbāsīd North and the Evidence of Copper Coins (AH 142–218 / AD 759–833)." American Journal of Numismatics (Second Series) 28 (2016): 201–230.
- Vardanyan, Edda, ed. Hořomos Monastery: Art and History. Collège de France — CNRS, Centre de recherche d'histoire et civilisation de Byzance, Monographies 50. Paris: ACHCByz, 2015.

- Vardanyan, Stella. "Medicine in Armenia." In The Diffusion of Greco-Roman Medicine into the Middle East and the Caucasus, edited by John A. C. Greppin, Emilie Savage-Smith and John L. Gueriguan, 185–98. Delmar, NY: Caravan Books, 1999.
- Waines, David. "The Third Century Internal Crisis of the Abbasids." Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient 20, no. 3 (1977): 282–306.
- Watson, Andrew M. Agricultural Innovation in the Early Islamic World: The Diffusion of Crops and Farming Techniques, 700–1100. Cambridge Studies in Islamic Civilization. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983.
- Webb, Ruth. "Aphthonius." ODLA.
- Wildberg, Christian. "David." The Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy (Summer 2018 Edition). Edited by Edward N. Zalta. Accessed 17 August 2021.
<https://plato.stanford.edu/archives/sum2018/entries/david/>.
- _____. "Elias." The Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy (Fall 2016 Edition). Edited by Edward N. Zalta. Accessed 17 August 2021.
<https://plato.stanford.edu/archives/fall2016/entries/elias/>.
- Winkler, Gabriele. "The Armenian Night Office II: The Unit of Psalmody, Canticles, and Hymns with Particular Emphasis on the Origins and Early Evolution of Armenia's Hymnography." REArm 17 (1983): 471–551.
- Yarnley, C.J. "The Armenian Philhellenes: A Study of the Spread of Byzantine Religious and Cultural Ideas among the Armenians in the X–XIth centuries A.D." Eastern Churches Review 8, no. 1 (1976): 45–53.
- Yeghiazaryan, Azat. Daredevils of Sasun: Poetics of an Epic. Translated from Armenian by S. Peter Cowe. Costa Mesa, CA: Mazda Publishers, 2008.
- Yovsep'ean, Garegin. "Hayagitakan ayl ew aylk'." Ararat 48, no. 10 (October 1914): 919–26.
- Zaminean, Abraham. Hay grakanut'ean patmut'iwn. Nor-Naxijewan, 1914.
- Zarphanalean, Garegin. Haykakan hin dprut'ean patmut'iwn (4-13 dar). Venice, 1886 (1st ed.); Venice, 1897 (2nd ed.).
- Zuckerman, Constantine. "Catholicos Anania of Mokk' on Himself and on Armenia's Rulers." In Mélanges Jean-Pierre Mahé, edited by Patricia Boisson, Aram Mardirossian, Agnès Ouzounian, and Constnatine Zuckerman. TM 18 (2014): 843–51.