CONTRIBUTORS

Hilda Blanco is an associate professor at the Department of Urban Design and Planning at the University of Washington. While on sabbatical last year, she lived in Santa Barbara.

Earl Blumenauer is a member of Congress representing Oregon. Before that, he served as a member of the Portland City Council, where he oversaw transportation planning and projects.

Peter Calthorpe is principal of Calthorpe Associates in Berkeley, a founder of the Congress of the New Urbanism, and author of The Next American Metropolis: Ecology, Community and the American Dream.

Ellen Dunham-Jones is a practicing architect, associate professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and chair of the Education Task Force of the Congress for the New Urbanism. Her practice and research focus on linking contemporary theory and post-industrial exurban development, and the design of infrastructure as public financing.

Robert S. Harris, FAIA, a contributing editor to Places, is a professor and urban design consultant. He directs the University of Southern California graduate programs in architecture, was dean of the schools of architecture at USC and the University of Oregon, and has been named a distinguished professor by the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture. In Los Angeles, he has chaired the Mayor's Design Advisory Panel and the Downtown Strategic Plan Advisory Committee.

Mark L. Hinshaw, FAIA, AICP, is director of urban design at LMN Architects in Seattle. He has been responsible for a wide range of projects, including downtown development, public spaces and pedestrian facilities, design-oriented codes and guidelines, and master plans for public facilities. He has served on the Seattle Design Commission and currently chairs Seattle's Downtown Design Review Board. He writes a regular column on architecture and urban design for the Seattle Times and is author of Citistate Seattle: Shaping a Modern Metropolis.

Jennifer Hock, former task force and congress coordinator at the Congress for the New Urbanism, is now studying architectural and urban history at Harvard University.

Douglas Kelbaugh, FAIA, is dean of the Taubman College of Architecture and Urban Planning at the University of Michigan. Previously, he was chair of the architecture department at the University of Washington, in Seattle, where he was principal in Kelbaugh, Calthorpe and Associates. He edited The Pedestrian Pocket Book and is author of Common Place, Toward Neighborhood and Regional Design. He studied architecture at Princeton.

Joongsob Kim, AICP, is a licensed architect and a Ph.D. candidate in environment and behavior at the University of Michigan. He holds degrees from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in architecture and planning. His areas of interest are effects of physical environment on people's behavior, design review and New Urbanism.

William R. Morrish, a contributing editor to Places, is director of the Design Center for the American Urban Landscape and professor of architecture at the University of Minnesota. His research focuses on the role of urban design in the development of infrastructure projects, and on the elements and systems that tie metropolitan neighborhoods together. He is author of Civilizing Terrains and co-author of Planning to Stay and Public Art Works: The Arizona Models. He studies architecture at Harvard and the University of California, Berkeley.

Anne Vernez Moudon, a contributing editor to Places, is professor of urban design and planning and Director of the Interdisciplinary Group for the Ph.D. in Urban Design and Planning at the University of Washington, Seattle. Her publications include Built for Change and the forthcoming Monitoring Urban Land Supply with GIS.

Anne Whiston Spirn is professor of landscape architecture and regional planning, co-director of the urban studies program, and director of the West Philadelphia Landscape Project at the University of Pennsylvania. She is author of The Language of Landscape and The Granite Garden: Urban Nature and Human Design, which won the President's Award of Excellence from the American Society of Landscape Architects.

Dell Upton is professor of architectural history at the University of California, Berkeley. He is the author, most recently, of Architecture in the United States and Madaline: Love and Survival in Antebellum New Orleans. He is beginning a study of African-American business districts and public spaces in the early twentieth-century South.
