HAROLD AURAND JR. is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Minnesota. His primary field is early American political history, and his outside area is sports history. His dissertation examines the political culture on the Upper Susquehanna frontier between 1750 and 1800, particularly how settlers from Connecticut accommodated themselves to Pennsylvania's system of local government.

LINDSAY FREDERICK BRAUN holds an M.A. in history from Michigan State University and is currently pursuing his Ph.D. at Rutgers University in British and comparative imperial histories.

MARION COFFEY is a Ph.D. student at Brown University in the American civilization department. Her field is women's history, especially women's reproductive history, and her dissertation is entitled "The Institutionalization of Pro-Choice America."

KATHLEEN DUVAL is a graduate student at the University of California, Davis. Her dissertation research involves cultural interactions in the Arkansas region from the late eighteenth through the early nineteenth centuries.

DAVID MANUEL HERNÁNDEZ is a doctoral student and National Science Foundation fellow in comparative ethnic studies at the University of California, Berkeley. He has written reviews and articles in Perspectives in Mexican American Studies, Aztlan, The Journal of Popular Film and Television, and Critical Sense.

MORGAN LOFTING is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Southern California and is at work on "The Fields of Hertfordshire": how the loosely knit Fields family of petty criminals managed to dodge, weave, and survive the multifarious legal systems of seventeenth-century England.

KENNETH McDONALD is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of California, Riverside in German history. His dissertation is entitled "Fascist Fashion: Dress, the State, and the Clothing Industry in the Third Reich.”

NEGAR MOTTAHEDEH received her Ph.D. from the Department of Cultural Studies and Comparative Literature at the University of Minnesota in September 1998. She currently teaches cultural studies and urban politics at the Higher Education Consortium for Urban Affairs. Her dissertation, “Representing the Unrepresentable: Historical Images of Reform from the Qajars to the Islamic Republic of Iran,” traces the historical mediation and dissemination of ideas for national reform in modern Iran through an investigation of dramatic, literary, historical, photographic, and cinematic modes of representation.

JEFFREY M. NADANER is a John M. Olin Foundation doctoral fellow in diplomacy at the Yale University Department of History. His dissertation is entitled “Shifting Sands: John F. Kennedy and the Middle East.”

DAVID SETTJE is a Ph.D. candidate at Kent State University and is working on a dissertation about the Lutheran church’s response to the Cold War and Vietnam War from 1964 to 1975. He is also an assistant editor of the Senator Robert A. Taft papers.

ROBERT SHAFFER is completing his Ph.D. dissertation at Rutgers University on the political views and activities of Pearl S. Buck. He will be an assistant professor of history at Shippensburg University of Pennsylvania beginning in September 1998. His article, “Cracks in the Consensus: Defending the Rights of Japanese Americans During World War II,” is forthcoming in the Radical History Review.
