KIMBERLY GAUDERMAN is currently a Doctoral Candidate in the Department of History, at the University of California, Los Angeles. Her dissertation focuses on Andean and African women in colonial markets in Quito, Ecuador, and examines how their identities were constructed in relation to each other within a Spanish urban environment.

MATTHEW RESTALL received his Ph.D. in History from the University of California, Los Angeles. His dissertation on Yucatec Maya society is based primarily on Maya-language documentation. He will join the faculty of Southwestern University in the Fall of 1993.

BARRY D. SELL is a Doctoral Candidate in History at the University of California, Los Angeles. His dissertation is based on a systematic analysis of an extensive corpus of Nahuatl-language Church imprints.

PETE SIGAL is a Ph. D. candidate at the University of California, Los Angeles. He is currently researching language related to the body and sexuality among the Yucatecan Maya of the colonial period for his dissertation.

LISA SOUSA is a Doctoral Candidate in the Department of History at the University of California, Los Angeles. She is currently co-translating an account of the apparition of the Virgin of Guadalupe for publication and conducting her dissertation research on Zapotec and Mixe communities of Southern Mexico.

KEVIN TERRACIANO is a Ph.D. Candidate in History at UCLA. He is currently writing a dissertation on colonial Mixtec society and culture based almost exclusively on the translation and analysis of hundreds of Mixtec-language documents from local archives in Oaxaca, Mexico.

DAMON L. WOODS is a Doctoral Candidate in History at UCLA, specializing in Southeast Asia. The primary focus of his research is the colonial Philippines, particularly the Ilocanos and Tagalogs.
