A SUPPLEMENT TO

SCRIPTORES HIBERNIAE MINORES

(CC 108 B & C)

*Rachele Duke, Roger White,
Anna Puckett, John Chittenden, Gloria Cohen*

This paper is the outcome of a seminar on anonymous Irish Bible commentaries given by Professor Bengt Löfstedt<sup>1</sup> in the spring quarter of 1976. The purpose of this seminar was to examine critically two recent editions of Irish exegesis: Tractatus Hilarii in Epistulas Canonicas (CC 108B) edited by Robert E. McNally, and Commentarius in Iohannem (CC 108C), edited by Joseph Kelly.<sup>2</sup> Since the number of our emendations and other corrections is surprisingly large, we feel that a catalog of these will provide a valuable supplement for the reader of these texts.

For convenience sake we have divided this paper into three parts: errors in transcription and printing, source notes, and textual criticism. Our typographical system differs from that of the editors in that we distinguish between lemmata and other quotations from the Bible. All lemmata are in capitals; the other quotations are italicized.

A few general comments about the editions of McNally and Kelly are necessary. In the first place both italicize only those words in the lemmata which agree exactly with the Biblical text used by the editors. Our punctuation reflects the intentions of the authors to quote ad sensum rather than ad litteram.

Second, we print only those corrections in the punctuation needed to clarify the text. Finally, we should like to draw the reader's attention to two points which we do not specifically discuss in this paper. In the manuscripts both id and id est are used to mean id est, a palaeographical convention with which the editors were apparently not familiar. Also, the scribes routinely confused quae and quia. Although the editors have made no attempt to give the right readings, we trust that the reader, informed of this, will have no difficulty in supplying the correct word.

Accentus autem acutus ( scripsi : acinctus cod. ) qui his nominibus imponitur, summa pars litterarum nominis ( scripsi : nomen cod. ) eius est, sensum in historiis significans et a certa imperitia ( scripsi : acentam imperitiam cod. ) mentem educens. This is the only meaningful way by which I could interpret this clause. "Educens" in line 56 compelled me to use the a + ablative. The term "imperitia" is found in Itala (II Timothy 3, 9). The Vulgate employs "insipientia."

Exibo autem totum bibit. This passage is obviously corrupt, but it appears less abstruse if one changes "in te ne tunc " to "interpretatur." Of "ostendit" I have made two words, translating it as "only that which reaches the mouth." In Thesaurus , Vol. DID-EFF, p. 3, 1. 79, we find: "Bibit, qui aliquid relinquit in poculo, ebbit, qui totum exhaustit."

Id est, nolite habere did not seem in context. I have therefore transferred it to line 334 on the following page, as an explicative of Nolite . The paragraph on p. 63, line 334 should now read; Non dixit: Non habete; sed dixit: Nolite , id est, nolite habere.

I propose to read: [Non] transitoria[e] et (sed codex ) pro parva requie reputatur praesens haec vita, which I interpret as: He will rest in you not just in passing, but this whole life of yours is considered one brief resting period. The meaning of the last sentence appears to be something like: Often this form of grace is bestowed on another person, e.g., on Eliša. This prompts me to read: Alii (scil. gratia datur), ut Helias de recessu suo dixit Heliseo. (Alius de recessu eius, ut Helias dixit Heliseo codex .).

	845	Punctuate: quia sila in ebreo sermone apostolus est in greco . . .
99	1f.	In its present form this sentence is not readily intelligible, especially since the name Simon is not mentioned in the first epistle. I suspect that the word "prima" in the next sentence led the scribe astray to write "prima" where he had, in fact, intended to put "secunda." My reading is therefore: In secunda (prima codex ) epistula praeomen, quod est Simon, <et> fidenter cognomen, quod est Petrus, ostenditur.
	6ff.	As it stands, this sentence is clumsy both in syntax and meaning. The author evidently wishes to explain why different names were used by Peter in referring to himself in the first and second epistles. In the first epistle, says Hilary, "servus" was used in order to emphasize Peter's divine ordination as apostle. In the second epistle both names, Simon and Petrus, are introduced to make sure that the apostle's adherents will be able to distinguish his full name from those of possible impostors. In keeping with this interpretation I propose the following emendations: In prima, ut ordinatus [est] ore salvatoris [et] sublimis apostolus visus esset. <In secunda>, ut (et codex ) non negantes nomen, quod est Simon, quibus praedicat, si ab aliis inscriptum viderent, reprobum et repudiatum viderent.

	495	"qui tunc retrosum et futurum prolem totius generis humani refixit." I propose to emend "refixit" to "revixit". "Rerefingere" is listed in Lewis and Short, A Latin Dictionary as meaning "to make anew, to remake," but it is rare and there is no listing of a perfect tense. There is a parallel in Kelly, CC 108B, p. 23, line 46 where the verb "reviviscere" is used transitively: "Id est revixit nos." Other verbs which are intransitive but are used transitively are "fugire" (Kelly p. 23, line 46) and "caescere" (Kelly p. 26, line 154) For more examples, consult Hofmann-Szantyr, p. 31. For the use of the letter v for f, consult B. Löfstedt, p. 103.

	539	"quae (sci. ecclesia) in sua lata vulva duos continent populi a summo viro Deo creati." "Viro" should be emended to "vero" and "populi" should be changed to "populos."
	550	"Primo in defossam murorum in funiculis missi <sunt>." The addition of "sunt" is unnecessary. Cf. Hofmann-Szantyr p. 389. Often there is an ellipsis of the verb "esse" with the perfect passive participle in Latin.
	560	"Alia autem via in qua eiciantur nuntii". I would emend eiciantur" to "eiciuntur" and explain the writing of the subjunctive for the indicative mood as a mistake made by a later copyist who mistook insular u for a. See Ehrle-Liebaert, Specimina , plate #22 line 5 for an example. At the end of the line, "quomodo" might serve as an example. Here the u looks as though it might be easily mistaken by a careless scribe and copied as an a.

	824-825	Locutus est ore mysticae. The word "mysticae" should be taken out of italics in McNally's text. "et oratio<ne> exhortationeque quod orat implorat." I would emend this to read as follows: "et oratio <est> exoratio[ne] quia quod orat implorat." I.e., "and prayer is a kind of moving entreaty because that which it prays for it implores." Otherwise I could not understand the text as it is printed.
76	869	"quia multitudo peccatorum numeratur doctori non <paucitas> peccati, . . ." I would emend "peccati" to "peccanti" (neatly balancing "adnuntianti" in line 870 below) and delete McNally's addition of "paucitas" as unnecessary. I then translate this as follows: "since a large number of sins is ascribed to a learned man not himself sinning, because he commits many sins not declaring the sins of other men."
78	57	"secundi autem Adam nusquam peccati labe violatur." I emend "nusquam" to "numquam."
78	73	Momentaneum "est" et leve "quod praessura est nostra." I emend "praessura" to "praessurae." The Vulgate reads tribulationis nostrae . Obviously then "praessura" has about the same sense as tribulatio . Otherwise the text as it stands would be nonsensical.
	73	"et inmensum" operatur pondus "a terraena gloria." This should be emended to "et inmensum" operatur pondus aeternum gloriae .
79	100	"<Spiritus> prophetiae prophetarum apostolis profuit." I would delete McNally's addition of "Spiritus" and emend "prophetiae" to "prophetia." This then would give good sense and at the same time would be an easier change to make in the text.
	103	"ut omnibus hominibus servis Dei prodessent in mundum." I emend "servis" to "servi" serving then as the subject of the verb "prodessent."
80	131	"id est adornatis idolis vel dominis divitiarum." I would emend "adornatis" to "adoratis," which is found in line 119 supra.
81	158	"id est fragilis et ruris et mortalis et defectiva." "Ruris" is nonsensical and I emend the word to "rudis" here.

83	264	"Quod Hebraeis nusquam convenit." I emend "nusquam" to better agree with "aliquando" in the lemma.
	248	"se venientum." Add the preposition "ad" before "se."

Clearly a dichotomy is being set up in this passage pairing "lex-gratia," "rex-pastor," and "Moyses-Christus." MINISTRI: apostoli sci<v>erunt a Christo sapientiam . . . Comment: 79 sponsum scripti : sponsam codex ; I realize that DEDIT AD SPONSUM is not from John 2,9, but the author frequently quotes the lemmata in a fashion to suit his immediate purposes ( cf. Comm. in Lucam IV,2, lines 62, 78, 83, pp. 30-1; Comm. in Ioh. II,6, lines 40, 47, pp. 111-2). Here he may be combining the ideas of the "architriclinus" calling to the bridegroom and the implied notion of his giving the bridegroom some wine to drink.
113	90-91	[de] prophetis et apostolis et doctrina eorum quod de ipsis mistice dicitur: agnovit bos possessorem suum , quod in Paulum . . .
	100-101	Funiculus triplex quia cogitavit, quia dixit, quia fecit. <2,16> ET MALIS DIXIT. Comment: 101 DIXIT scripti : dixerunt codex . The subject of "cogitavit, dixit, fecit" must be "Christus." "Et malis dixerunt," then, must be a corrupted or hastily written form of John 2,16: "et his qui columbas vendunt dixit." The following commentary shows that the author is now thinking of "his," i.e. "malis," not of "funiculus."
	109-110	Id est <2,21> DE TEMPLO CORPORIS SUI dicit, quia venit . . .
	112	reaedificatum scripti : ne aedificatum codex .
	120-121	ET SERMONI <Osee> qui dicit: Visitabit vos post biduum . Comment: Osee scripti : Esaiae codex ; Osee 6,3 actually reads, "vivificabit nos post duos dies," but the author probably was quoting from memory and/or thinking of Christ's return from the dead after two days to visit his disciples.
114	125	Dominus noster <non> credit se illis.
	32-33	†Perhaps it should read something like this: Peccata quae occidit mors Christi <mortes sunt>. Vivificamus ea[s]. Et peccata sunt . . .
		Note: 32 et scripti : ex codex .

11-13		Note: nos scripti : non codex . Sicut enim mulier quae facta est quando dormivit Adam virtutem sumpsit de costa Adae quod infirmatio eius fuit; sic . . .
116	23	Comment: The author here has confused the sense of an interesting passage in Augustine: Adam is weak because he was made of flesh; Eve is strong because she was made of Adam's rib and obviously bone is stronger than flesh. (Aug, XV, 8, p. 153.)

12		<5,3> EXPECTATIO AQUAE [id] MOTUS.
13-14		Note: motus scripti : modum codex . Idem: leges et reges et iudices <et> sacerdotes. Vel ANGELUS DOMINI: id est Spiritus . . .
18		Note: 13 et scripti : vel codex .
19		intuendus scripti : in tuendum codex .
22		prophetis, evangelio scripti : prophetas, evangelia codex .
117-8	26-38	ii scripti: xiii codex : see "Source Notes." <5,8> SURGE, TOLLE, AMBULA: Trea dixit. Sed SURGE non operis <imperium fuit,> sed operatio sanitatis. Sano autem duo imperavit: tolle grabatum tuum et ambula . In his duobus Domini iussis duo praecpta significata caritatis sunt. Dei prior est ordine praecipi<endi> dilectio; proximi autem dilectio prior est ordine faciendi. TOLLE GRABATTUM mihi videtur dixisse: dilige proximum tuum. Nam ille languidus grabatto portabatur, sanatus autem <grabatum portat>. Quod homine dictum est: onera vestra portate invicem . Cum esses languidus, portabat te proximus tuus; sanus factus es, porta proximum tuum. Cum ergo <tuleris> grabattum tuum, noli remanere, ambula . Diligendo proximo iter agis. Quo[d] iter agis, nisi ad Dominum Deum quem diligere debes?
118	39	Comments: 27 imperium fuit scripti : imperiunt codex . The entire commentary on John 5,8 is lifted almost verbatim from Augustine (see "Source Notes"). Thus in this passage wherever I suggest an emendation it is taken from a passage in Augustine. 33 grabatum portat scripti : grabatto codex ; the author's reading, while grammatically possible, destroys the meaning of the passage. 36 tuleris scripti : tolleris codex .
