FOREWORD

In this issue, the UCLA Women's Law Journal is privileged to publish two outstanding articles that highlight the present-day importance of the study of women and the law.

Our first article, "The Attack on Planned Parenthood: A Historical Analysis", provides a historical background to current legal and political issues with the Planned Parenthood organization.

Our second article, "The Purgatory of Pole Dancing", examines the effect of employment and First Amendment law on the livelihood of exotic dancers.

Our journal continues to show that gender issues are implicated in every area of the law.

We would like to thank our authors for their articles and their cooperation throughout the editing process, our board members for their hard work, and our readers for their passion and commitment to the study of women and the law.
