Program Notes:

Completed in 2011 for solo euphonium, Tonoi IX is the ninth in an ongoing series of works for solo performers. During the course of writing these solo works, I have established certain characteristics common to all the pieces in the series. The pieces are episodic and abstract in nature, having no particular idea or “program” attached to them. Although presented in one contiguous movement, the works are divided into clear sections. Each piece is dedicated and written for a specific performer. In the case of this work, I have written and dedicated the work to Adam Frey, euphonium instructor at the Georgia State University School of Music. I write these pieces in a linear fashion – beginning with the first measure and writing straight through to the last with no insertions of sections; composing a later section before an earlier section, etc. It is typical for the works to use and develop the harmonic and melodic materials presented at the beginning of a given work throughout the piece. Each section of the respective pieces moves further away from the original statement. Succeeding sections may seem to have been arrived at in a logical manner, however, they move the listener further and further away from the opening motivic and/or harmonic environment originally presented. The game that I set-up up for myself is to figure out a way to return to the opening material no matter how far I have wandered. In all of the Tonoi works, I am also interested in writing as idiomatically as possible for the respective solo instrument.

This image shows a musical score for piano, consisting of ten staves of music. The score is divided into sections by measure numbers: 42, 46, 52, 58, 64, 71, 76, and 82. Each staff features a bass clef and a dynamic range from p (pianissimo) to ff (fortissimo). Articulation marks like dots and dashes are placed above and below the notes. Time signatures change frequently, including 3/4, 2/4, and 3/8. Measure 52 includes a box labeled 'B'. Measure 64 starts with a dynamic of p. Measures 71 and 76 begin with a dynamic of ff. Measure 82 ends with a dynamic of f.
