FOREWORD

I am honored to present Volume I of the UCSD Undergraduate Law Review. Over the past year, our editorial team has worked diligently to create a platform where diverse members of the student community may gain the academic experience necessary to explore issues important to them and offer unique insights from a legal perspective. This first edition reflects our hopes that the undergraduate legal space will become more inclusive and accessible while maintaining its commitment to excellent research and discourse.

In Volume I, we are proud to introduce the work of eight distinguished writers. These individuals come from a variety of majors, years, and backgrounds to offer analysis on topics ranging from the digital proliferation of medical misinformation to the fair use of fan-made texts. We hope you will find that the articles produced reflect our rigorous standards and engage with relevant issues in a thoughtful and practical manner.

This year, I would like to give special thanks to Anna Yan and Camille Schaefer from the UCLA Undergraduate Law Journal. Their initial guidance was invaluable as we navigated our journal's system for management and publication, and their exceptional work has served as a reminder for where our expectations should fall. I also recognize our Managing Editor Morgan Yen for the remarkable consistency she has displayed, as well as Business Director Sea Choi for her earnest work with our external advisors. Terry Li and Brendon Hahm have my additional sincere thanks — their early dedication was integral to this journal and not forgotten. Lastly, I am grateful for all of the student members who have demonstrated noteworthy perseverance and grace with us through this past year, and wish them the best in their own journeys of growth. I know this journal and community will continue to progress and look forward to its role in fostering meaningful discourse and reflection.
